U. S. May Tax Some Paid by States, High Court Rules

Officers 'Essential' to Government Declared Only Ones Exempt.

Decision Narrows Field of Immunity

Tax Rule Outlined.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Supreme Court yesterday sharply narrowed the field of State immunity from Federal taxation to definitely bring under the Federal tax structure State employes not performing any function "essential to the continued existence of the State government."

"The basis upon which constitutional tax immunity of a State has been supported is the protection which it affords to the continued existence of the State," ruled Justice Stone.

"To attain that end it is not ordinarily necessary to confer on the State a competitive advantage over private persons in carrying on the operations of its government."

Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill called the ruling "probably one of the great decisions of the past decade."

The President has recommended that all official salaries, both State and Federal, be subjected to reciprocal taxation by simple legislation.

Magill said the decision strengthened the President's recommendation. The Treasury undersecretary and tax authority in the past had recommended that immunities be removed only by constitutional amendment.

Football Held Taxable.

Stone's decision came in the face of a brief filed with the court by 28 States asking protection from "Federal usurpation" and "the burden of Federal taxation."

The court decided, 5 to 2, that three officials of the Port of New York Authority, operating bridges, tunnels and other bi-State transportation facilities for New York and New Jersey must pay a Federal income tax.

In another parallel case, the court decided, 6 to 2, that the Federal Government may collect its 10 per cent admissions tax on athletic events of a State university.

In a test made by regents of the University System of Georgia, Justice Roberts ruled the Federal admissions tax applies, citing Stone's argument in the Port Authority case.

Roberts said that "however essential a system of public education to the existence of the State, the conduct of exhibitions for admissions paid by the public is not such a function of State government as to be free from the burden of a non-discriminatory tax laid on all admissions to public ex-

City Tree Census To Cost $179,000

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Ohio, May 23.—A census of Cleveland's trees, for which the WPA has allotted $179,000, will be started as soon as expert foresters can be found to conduct it, WPA officials said today. Cleveland is called "The Forest City."

E. B. Volmar, senior office engineer for the WPA here, said the project would give work relief to 420 persons for six months. Clerks, accountants, tree surgeons and draftsmen will be employed, he said.

Municipal Park officials said the census would enumerate places where trees are needed, preparatory to the planting of perhaps 100,000 saplings.

Hugo Varga, city park director, said the WPA is now spending $840,000 a month to keep 1,400 men employed on a park improvement program.

South Beaten In House Pay, Hours Battle

Opposition Chiefs Concede Defeat After 6-Hour Floor Debate.

By Sidney Olson.

Conservative Southern Democrats fought a hopeless battle for six hours yesterday against the House version of the wage-hour bill, with their leaders conceding defeat last night.

The House will meet at 11 a. m. today, so that, in the words of Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, of Texas, "we can get the pain over with in a hurry."

Rayburn referred to the desperate and bitter, but unavailing struggle made by the conservative Southerners against the measure, which would impose rigid wage minimums and hour maximums on all industries affecting interstate commerce.

The bill, blasted out of the die-hard House Rules Committee by a petition presented by Labor Committee Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, finally reached the floor yesterday after 20 minutes of heated debate over the rule granting it right-of-way.

U. S. Borrows 50 Million At a Record Low Price

Secretary Morgenthau announced yesterday that a record price was paid by banks and other bidders for $50,000,000 worth of 91-day Treasury bills.

The average accepted bid was $99.994 for each $100 face value bill. This was equivalent to borrowing money at .025 per cent. The previous record, set last week, was $99.993, equal to .027 per cent.

Utility Loan Curb Fought By New Deal

Compromise Offered to Let PWA Aid Cities in Competition.

Barkley to Present Substitute for Senate's Amendment.

With apparent Administration backing, Senate Majority Leader Barkley yesterday moved to modify the Senate Appropriations Committee's curb on PWA loans and grants to municipalities to construct power systems in competition with private utilities.

As Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, opened the Senate minority attack on the President's $3,247,000,000 spending-lending bill, Barkley left a White House legislative conference with a proposal to "compromise" the restriction on PWA financing of public utilities.

Barkley said he would offer his plan as a substitute for the committee amendment which denies PWA funds "for any income-producing project . . . which will compete with any existing privately owned or operated public utility the rates of which are now subject to public regulation."

Bona Fide Offer Stipulated.

The leadership "compromise" would permit the Public Works Administration to advance funds for construction of competing public utilities where the going private utility refused "a bona fide offer of purchase at a fair price" made by a municipality.

Barkley said the Public Works Administrator himself would be judge of whether a fair offer of purchase had been made and refused. He said "no objection" was raised at the White House to his proposal, but indicated the Administration would oppose the original PWA restriction recommended by the Senate comittee.

Barkley's proposal dashed cold water on early reports of Administration compliance in the Senate committee move to end the Government-utility warfare over public power competition.

Senator Hale Sees "Piracy."

Although utility interests were expected to support the substitute if the more drastic PWA restriction fails, Senator Hale (Republican), of Maine, author of the original curb, denounced the "compromise" as "sheer piracy" and "no concession at all."

Extreme New Dealers and leaders of the public power bloc in the Senate were no less caustic in their criticism of the modified restriction, and declared they would

Alcatraz Prison Break Is Foiled; 2 Shot, 1 Slugged

San Francisco, May 23 (AP).—A guard was seriously injured and two long-term convicts wounded by rifle fire today in a desperate attempt by three prisoners to escape from Alcatraz Island Penitentiary, Federal prison for incorrigibles in San Francisco Bay.

Warden James A. Johnston said the break occurred shortly after noon in the factory building.

Those injured are R. C. Cline, senior custodial officer, slugged and seriously hurt; Convicts Thomas R. Limerick and Rufas Franklin, both shot by a guard, and in a serious condition. Limerick was shot in the head, and Franklin in the shoulder.

The third convict, James C. Lucas, whom Warden Johnston said once stabbed Al Capone, former Chicago gangster, was overpowered.

Two Women Sit Together in the Courtroom as 7 Jurors Are Picked; State Says Youth Shot Sweetheart, Failed to Take Own Life.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 23.—Two women—one the mother of slain Charlotte Matthiesen and the other the mother of the boy who killed her—sat together as friends in criminal court today to prove to the jurors they both wanted Donald Carroll, jr., 16, acquitted.

The State claims that Donald and Charlotte had an adolescent affair, that the girl became pregnant, that in panic they resolved to die together, that the boy shot Charlotte and then failed to take his own life.

Mrs. Fred Matthiesen, the girl's mother, termed it a "tragedy of adolescence" and the Matthiesens from the first have stood with the boy.

Today, Mrs. Matthiesen and Mrs. Carroll exchanged confidences in the courtroom; they went out together to eat, and their husbands sat with them.

Late in the day, seven jurors, all parents save two, had been seated. The prosecution sought particularly to know the family status of each venireman—the number of his children; to know whether veniremen were biased in the defendant's favor because of his youth.

Mrs. Palmer Guarded After 'Red' Threats

Pennsylvania Movie Censor on Way Here to Talk With FBI Chief.

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, May 23.—A State policeman was assigned today to protect Mrs. Margaret F. Palmer, chairman of the Pennsylvania board of motion picture censors, after she told Gov. George H. Earle her life had been threatened because she banned a Russian film as "subversive."

Mrs. Palmer, widow of United States Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, said men threatened her in the subway and on the street, attempted to enter her hotel room and once succeeded in throwing a bottle of acid on her dress, each time warning her to lift the ban on the Russian movie "Baltic Deputy" or be killed.

Gov. Earle said she would be guarded "day and night." Mrs. Palmer left for Washington tonight to confer with J. Edgar Hoover, who has started an investigation into the threats.

Mrs. Palmer said she suffered a severe attack of ptomaine poisoning shortly after the board banned the film. The board's decision described the picture as "rabble rousing" and said it would "incite people to destroy the Government."

The Amkino Corporation, distributors of the film, won an appeal to Common Pleas Judge Curtis Bok, liberal member of the city judiciary, who set aside the ban in a blistering decision. An appeal by the board of censors is pending in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Mrs. Palmer recalled the "time the front of our home was blown up in Washington" while her husband was Attorney General under Woodrow Wilson.

Marinelli Wins Acquittal by Jury

New York, May 23 (AP).—A Federal court jury tonight acquitted Albert I. Marinelli, Tammany district leader and former New York county clerk, of a charge of harboring a fugitive from justice, Charles Falci, indicted for election frauds.

Ordered by Gov. Lehman to answer "sworn charges" which which Thomas E. Dewey made after a grand jury inquiry, Marinelli resigned his clerkship last December shortly before expiration of his term.

"It is a good thing to be vindicated," he said tonight.

Woodring Asks Guns to Repel Raids on Coast

Recent Air 'Games' in East Showed Vulnerability, Secretary Hints.

By Barry Sullivan.

Maximum increases in existing facilities for antiaircraft and seacoast defense must be made at once to assure the United States against aggression, Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring said last night.

"These entirely defensive armaments," he declared, "are absolutely essential to an adequate defense of the country, especially at the outbreak of war."

The Secretary made his observations as it became known that high ranking Navy officers are conducting intensive, detailed study of five air crashes at sea, in which 31 lives and six $200,000 planes have been lost since the first of the year.

The relatively large number of losses, attributed chiefly to the increase in the use of aircraft, occurred prior to and during the recent extensive "war games" in the Pacific.

Reports from naval courts of inquiry covering all of the crashes are in the hands of naval experts here. A Hawaiian newspaper article, put into the Congressional Record by Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, blamed the accidents largely on excessive work of pilots under allegedly inexperienced superiors, flying in "pea soup" weather, and "radio silence" orders. Officials here indicated they considered such charges unfounded.

Recognizing the importance of defenses against aircraft, the Senate has included in the Army appropriation bill an item of $15,000,000 for such material and has author-

Landon said he planned to see District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, sometimes called a Presidential possibility, Wednesday night.

German Staff Quits; China Wins 3 Cities

'Chiang's Own' Pound Japanese When Nazi Advisers Quit Him.

Say Doihara's Forces Were Wiped Out in 'Greatest Battle.'

By the United Press.

Shanghai (Tuesday), May 24.—Infuriated by the action of Adolf Hitler in withdrawing all German advisers to the Chinese army and cutting off German munitions to China, Gen. Chiang Kai-shek today threw his personal divisions into a series of smashing counter-offensives against the Japanese which at dawn had resulted in the recapture of three important cities and a dozen villages by the Chinese.

A spokesman for the general in Hankow, confirming withdrawal of all Germany's support for China, said Chiang's own troops recaptured Lanfeng, Yifeng and Tangshan—all key cities in the fortified Lunghai Railway line defending Hankow, the provisional Chinese national capital.

"Greatest Battle of War."

The spokesman said withdrawal of the German military advisers, headed by Gen. Alexander von Falkenhausen, a World War veteran, was "unfortunate" but would not influence Chinese resistance.

The spokesman said:

"The Japanese abandoned Lanfeng after our mobile columns, attacking behind flame-throwing tanks, had captured Yifeng, 5 miles east of Lanfeng.

"This battle was the greatest of the war to date. The fourteenth Japanese division, commanded by Gen. Kenji Doihara, was crushed."

Envoy Brings Recall.

In recapturing Tangshan, in the same area and 35 miles east of Kweiteh, the spokesman said, "we took this key point following a 24-hour battle.

"To the northward, in Hopei Province, our guerrillas filtered through the Japanese lines and last night staged a mass attack on Paotingfu (a major city on the Peiping-Hankow Railway south of Peiping).

"On the Tientsin-Pukow Railway our guerrillas were severing Japanese communications lines around Tsang-chow (south of Tientsin)."

The spokesman said the German ambassador, Dr. Oscar Trautmann, called on Foreign Minister Wang Chung-hui on Saturday and personally delivered an order from Hitler ordering all the German advisers to the Chinese army to return home.

The ambassador also told the foreign minister Hitler had ordered

D.C. Girl, Kidnaped By Driver of Sedan, Escapes in Woods

Kidnaped by the driver of a sedan who accosted her at Nebraska and Massachusetts avenues northwest, a 16-year-old American University student escaped last night after wandering for two hours through a heavily wooded section near the District line.

The girl, Jean Forbes, of 1277 New Hampshire avenue northwest, told police that she was waiting for a streetcar when the man drove up in a sedan, struck her on the head and pulled her into his car. He drove into Maryland, she said, and attempted to park in a wooded section. His car bogged down in the mud.

As he leaped from the car to release the wheels, the girl ran into the woods, swept at the time by a heavy rain.

After wandering for two hours, she arrived at the home of Dr. Harry Neale, on River road, in Maryland.

Powers Warn Hitler on Reported Arms Cache Across Border.

Foreign Developments.

Prime Minister Chamberlain announced Czechoslovakia and Germany assured Britain they preferred peace talks to war.

Hitler was reported to have informed Britain through a personal secret emmissary he had no intention of invading Czechoslovakia.

Premier Hodza of Czechoslovakia and Sudeten German Minority Leader Henlein conferred. Henlein was reported to have demanded immediate demobilization of Czech reserves.

French circles feared renewal of tension if Henlein's demands were granted.

Prefer Talks to War.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 23.—Great Britain has won assurances from both Germany and Czechoslovakia that they prefer peace talks to war.

Prime Minister Chamberlain announced this today to a silent House of Commons after a week-end of tension and fears of an explosion over the 3,500,000 Sudeten Germans in Czechoslovakia.

[Unconfirmed reports, however, said Henlein demanded that Premier Hodza immeditaely cancel the mobilization order of Saturday, the Associated Press stated. The order brought out 70,000 reserves and additional thousands of technical troops to bolster Czechoslovakia's 190,000 army.—Editor's note.]

The government gained the peace pledges in its efforts with France to avert a war which might involve the rest of Europe.

Chamberlain told how Britain, in the urgent role of an honest umpire, represented:

To Czechoslovakia—"The need for taking every precaution for the avoidance of incidents and of making every possible effort to reach a comprehensive and lasting settlement by negotiation with representatives of the Sudeten Party."

To Germany—"The urgent importance of reaching a settlement if European peace is to be preserved . . ."

"At the moment," he declared, "the situation appears to have somewhat eased . . ."

Henlein, Hodza Meet.

Shortly after he disclosed that Konrad Henlein, leader of the Sudeten German Party, and Premier Milan Hodza, of Czechoslovakia, would confer on the Czechoslovak dispute, the two held a lengthy conference in Prague.

But sparks still flew on Czechoslovakia's steel-backed borders.

Informed sources in Paris said Britain and France had warned Hitler he could not make another Spain of his eastern neighbor by sending arms to Czechoslovakia.

They said the two democracies were spurred to this action by reports of Nazi arms stores inside the Czechoslovak borders.

Germans reported a Czechoslovakian airplane had violated the border and then crashed in flames on its own territory.

British Critics Silenced.

Both in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords, where Foreign Secretary Halifax repeated Chamberlain's statement, the government succeeded in keeping anxious critics silent by advance conferences with opposition leaders.

Rebel Aid Plea Reported Sent To Reich, Italy

Franco Appeals for Men and Guns as Loyalists Press New Drive.

By the United Press.

Hendaye, France, May 23.—Generalissimo Francisco Franco was reported tonight to have sent urgent appeals to Germany and Italy for more men, guns and fighting planes as government dispatches reported important gains in a surprising offensive along a 55-mile front in northern Catalonia.

The Barcelona government announced 20,000 loyalist troops under command of Vicente Rojo had captured the San Cornelio mountain range east of Tremp, 39 miles south of the French frontier, and also a strategic hill to the north of Tremp.

The offensive was designed to recapture five big hydroelectric power plants along the Segre and Noguera-Pallaresa rivers.

Insurgent dispatches contradicted the Loyalist claims.

[A great manhunt was under way behind the lines of insurgent Spain for 900 of 1,500 prisoners who escaped from the insurgent San Cristobal Prison, at Pamplona, in a spectacular uprising, the Associated Press reported.

[The prisoners made a mass break Sunday, frontier sources said, killing one prison guard and kidnaping another. By Sunday night large posses of civil guards were reported to have rounded up 600 of the fugitives.—Editor's note.]

Neutral military observers believed the loyalists, bulwarked by freshly acquired arms including fast tanks and fighting planes, sought to force Franco to abandon resumption of his drive into Catalonia.

Participating in the loyalist offensive, according to reports, were seven columns of the International Brigade, as well as the crack Campesino and Lister brigades.

1,000,000 Workers May Ask To March on Cedillo 'Fascists'

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, May 23.—Leaders of 1,000,000 Mexican workers tonight considered asking President Lazaro Cardenas to arm them to help fight what they termed "the Fascist rebellion" in the state of San Luis Potosi.

The executive committee of the Mexican Workers Confederation called a meeting to discuss the situation.

[Trinidad Alamillo, secretary-general of the San Luis Potosi State government, was arrested in Mexico City this afternoon, it was announced officially tonight, according to the United Press. He will be turned over to civil authorities—Editor's note.]

Out in San Luis Potosi, capital of the state in which federal troops are fighting followers of Saturnino Cedillo, an authoritative source said the government forces had located the camp of the powerful agrarian leader.

They were reported to have found it at Montebello, about 8 miles northwest of Ciudad Maiz and about the same distance east of Las Palomas, Cedillo's vast ranch in western San Luis Potosi. The government was said also to have intercepted messages from Cedillo's portable radio set indicating he would attempt to make his way northward into the state of Tamaulipas and possibly try to flee to the United States.

A nephew of the hunted Cedillo, Hipolito Cedillo, was killed Friday

Langdon Admits Effort to Fix An Alibi for Limerick Murder

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Robert F. Langdon, the former policeman accused of slaying Beulah Limerick, admitted under cross-examination yesterday that he attempted to establish an alibi for his whereabouts on December 31, 1930, the night of the murder.

But he denied it was through an "alibi witness" called earlier in the trial by Prosecutor John Wilson, and said his motive was in no way connected with the Limerick case.

H' face florid and manner vague, Langdon repeatedly mopped his brow and glanced nervously toward the jury as he uttered a blanket denial of all Government charges during a long, rambling account of his activities on the murder night.

"Do you remember attending a party after you were first released in the Limerick affair?" asked Wilson.

"I don't remember any party."

"Don't you remember going to a party given for you by Jack Zimberg?"

"I remember going to a party with Zimberg because he asked me down."

"When you were released, didn't you make some arrangements with Zimberg about an alibi?"

"Yes, I think I did."

Wilson then brought out that Langdon had arranged with Zimberg (described by the prosecution as a former bootlegger and friend of the accused man) to say he was

Court Upholds Labor Board in Three Disputes

Tribunal Bans Review of Order Demanding Rand Rehire 4,000.

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday saw three more of its decisions emerge victorious from court fights that carried them to the highest tribunal.

The Supreme Court refused to review, and thus left in effect, the board's famous and bitterly-worded ruling against Remington Rand, Inc., in which the company was ordered to reinstate some 4,000 workers and to bargain collectively with an affiliate union of the American Federation of Labor.

Must Rehire Strikers.

The court similarly refused to review decisions against the Black Diamond Steamship Co., and Carlisle Lumber Co., Onalaska, Wash.

The Black Diamond Co. was directed to cease interference with self-organization of its employes, offer reinstatement with back pay to 35 strikers and to bargain with the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association. The lumber concern must, under the board ruling, release employes from a "yellow dog" contract, reinstate strikers and bargain with the A. F. of L.'s lumber and sawmill workers union.

At the same time the NLRB participated in arguments in the Supreme Court in its fight to withdraw from the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, in order to alter its procedure in the action, its case against the Republic Steel Corporation. The board has brought mandamus action against the Circuit Court, which has refused permission to recall the case.

"Wholesale Violations."

The Remington Rand decision was one of the most sharply worded yet issued by the board.

It held the company had engaged in "wholesale violations" of the Wagner labor relations act, using "ruthless" methods to break the strike of more than 6,000 employes in its six plants which it laid to the company's "grim determination not to bargain collectively with the unions representing those employes but to settle the issues by force."

It said the company employed four well-known strike-breaking agencies, and publicity agents who were to organize and carry out the so-called Mohawk Valley formula for ending strikes. The board held the company had coerced employes and by its "secret formation of 'back-to-work' employe associations had deliberately flouted" provisions of the Wagner labor relations law.

Study Republic Case.

The Circuit Court at New York had upheld the board for the most part, but struck out a provision that the company must pay transportation of reinstated employes to new jobs, where factories had been moved.

The Supreme Court took the Republic case under advisement after Robert B. Watts, for the board, and Luther Day, Republic counsel, of Cleveland, had offered arguments.

Republic maintained that since the company, and not the board, had appealed to the Circuit Court, the "appeal should be free from the control of the board."

Linked to Ford Dispute.

Supreme Court decision in the Republic case is expected to apply also in similar action involving the Ford Motor Co. and other concerns.

The board sought to withdraw them because of the possibility that procedure followed did not meet requirements set up by the Supreme Court in the Kansas City Stockyards case last month.

In that case the court held that an intermediate report to which the company might take exceptions should have been made available. No such intermediary reports were made, with opportunity for rebuttal, in the Republic, Ford and several other cases.

Lee Seeks New Domestic Allotment Program for Cotton; Pope Asks Study of Phosphates.

Substitution of a domestic allotment system for the cotton acreage reduction program now in effect was called for yesterday by Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma. He would provide an allotment to each cotton grower of his share of a normal year's domestic consumption and would fix the minimum domestic price at 20 cents a pound through price-pegging loans. Cotton in excess of quotas could be sold only in the world market.

SEN. LEE.

Recalling that a similar proposal received 26 Senate votes several months ago, Lee told the Associated Press his suggestion would receive more.

Following out suggestions in the President's recent message on phosphate, Senator Pope (Democrat), of Idaho, proposed creation of a joint Congressional committee of six members to investigate the "adequacy and use" of the Nation's phosphate resources.

Farm discontent over acreage quotas was reflected yesterday in the completion of Congressional action on a bill making revisions in quotas for cotton and tobacco under the 1938 farm act. The measure, sent to the President by the Senate, would permit reallocation of unused cotton quotas to other farms within the same State, preference being given to farms within the same county. National quotas for flue-cured, dark air-cured, fire-cured and burly tobaccos would be increased 2 per cent.

The joint Congressional committee named to investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority agreed to hear testimony of Dr. Arthur E. Morgan and other TVA directors beginning tomorrow and without first appointing a counsel.

Representative James A. Mead (Democrat), of New York, vice chairman of the ten-man committee, explained that Dr. Morgan will first present his charges of malfeasance against his co-directors, David E. Lilienthal and Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan, and that the others will follow later in the week.

"The delay until next week in appointing the counsel will not hamper the investigation because the committee wants the directors to offer all of their testimony before cross-examination," Mead said.

Judge Samuel Seabury, of New York, is reported considered as counsel.

'Trust' Witness Says Testimony Cost Business

Letter to Borah Claims He Was 'Pushed Around' After Appearance.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, put into the Senate record yesterday a letter from a Yorkville, Ill., motor car dealer who charged that his appearance before a Federal grand jury which considered antitrust indictment of auto finance firms "cost us our business."

The letter, bearing the typewritten signature of Fred L. Wright, said Wright was a Government witness before the grand jury at Milwaukee, Wis., and asserted that "after this case was dismissed our firm was pushed around by the finance company in an effort by them to break us."

"Failing to do this, Ford Motor Co. finally canceled us out," the letter continued. The writer said his firm was obliged to take a $1,000 loss through forced liquidation by a finance company "and in addition (it) cost us our business."

The writer protested against the public announcement by the Justice Department that it would seek grand jury action against three motor firms and their affiliated finance companies soon at South Bend, Ind., for alleged practices in restraint of trade.

New Fight Is Opened.

South Bend, Ind., May 23 (AP).—The Government opened here today a second fight to indict the country's three largest automobile manufacturers under the Sherman antitrust law.

Government attorneys began presentation of evidence before a Federal grand jury, from which they hope to obtain indictments against the Ford Motor Co., General Motors Corporation and the Chrysler Corporation and their affiliated finance companies.

A similar grand jury investigation ended at Milwaukee last December 17 when Federal Judge F. A. Geiger dismissed the jury on grounds the Department of Justice had shown "impropriety" in discussing a consent decree with the automobile companies' counsel while the jury was in session.

Farley Brands Spending Critics 'Doom - Sealers'

Chicago, May 23 (AP).—Postmaster General James A. Farley today assailed as "doom-sealers" critics of the Administration's spending-lending program.

"The doom-sealers," he said in an address prepared for the Commonwealth Club, "are again sending forth their mournful prophecies of evil because of Government acts performed or suggested.

"Stocks are down a bit. There is a recurrence of vast unemployment. Certain taxes bear heavily on people or corporations with plethoric purses. So the same element that has held every national emergency as a precursor of doom is out again in full cry.

"The republic," he said, "is in no danger. It never has been in danger since the present Administration checked the downward spiral of the big depression and started us again on the upward path."

Just One Bad Break After Another

Stephen J. Healy, who can still smile at 53 though an encounter with a taxicab here robbed him of his second job with a circus since April. He wants another job when he quits the hospital—"the harder it is the better."

Bump by Taxi Climaxes Run Of Bad Luck for Circus Man

Healy Had a Job, But Show 'Folded;' Tramp Stole His Clothes; He Found More Work, Then Auto Hit Him.

Life for Stephen J. Healy has been a series of ups and downs lately, with the downs outnumbering the ups.

Healy, who is 53 and calls Chicago his home, at present is in Casualty Hospital with several broken ribs and an injured back, the result of an encounter with a taxi May 15.

The series of unlucky breaks really started back in April, Healy explained yesterday. About six weeks ago he joined Col. Tim McCoy's Wild West Show in Chicago. At the time it sounded fine. He would get $15 a week and room and board for helping out up the "A" top for the Indian act and playing the part of a surveyor in "The Winning of the West."

The first cash he saw was $10.25, some weeks later in Cincinnati. The second and final installment was $3, his share of what was left when the show folded here May 4.

Healy was luckier than most of his 400 stranded colleagues. The receivers for the defunct show hired him to help in the inventory of the stock preparatory to the auction two weeks ago.

He was paid off a week ago Saturday. Later that day, while the troupe's box cars were being unloaded, a tramp made off with a suitcase containing all his clothes—and his razor.

"All I had left was the pair of dirty dungarees I was wearing," Healy said with a grin. "So I went out and spent all the money on more clothes."

The same day, he managed to get a job putting up canvas for the Ringling-Barnum & Bailey show, due here 24 hours later. Sunday, as he crossed Florida avenue to the circus grounds, a taxi canceled out that lucky break.

Healy's Irish optimism helps him to face the future with a smile, though he admits he won't know where to turn when he leaves the hospital later this week. He'd like to catch up with the Ringling show.

"But how can I swing a 16-pound sledge hammer with a bum back?" he asks. "I'll take anything I can get—the harder it is, the better I'll like it."

A fellow-occupant of his hospital ward thinks he may be able to find work for Healy with the Salvation Army. "I'll miss him when he goes, though," his friend commented. "He knows more stories!"

Healey's three room-mates like particularly to hear him tell about a five-week voyage he made to Hongkong and Singapore between circus jobs last fall. When that palls, he draws on his stock of anecdotes collected during 35 years of experience with Ringling and with the Floto troupe on the West Coast, interspersed with gold prospecting and work in diamond mines.

Healy was distressed to learn that Col. McCoy's own horse, The Chief, was sold last week, completing the liquidation of the show's stock. He doesn't blame the Colonel for his failure but attributes it to bad management and poor publicity.

Court Rebuke His Own Fault, Aide to Hoover Tells Wallace

Former Solicitor Writes That Secretary Disregarded Precedents in His Handling of Stock Yards Case.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, May 23.—Elton L. Marshall, former solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, today wrote Secretary Wallace that the defects in procedure found by the Supreme Court in the Kansas City Stockyards case resulted from the handling of the case by Wallace's own administration and not its conduct by the preceding administration.

The stockyards litigation has become a legal cause celebre since Chief Justice Hughes' opinion holding that the "rudimentary requirements of fair play" must be observed in the quasi-judicial proceedings of administrative agencies.

In a letter to the Chief Justice, Secretary Wallace said, among other things, that he had inherited the case from the preceding Hoover Administration.

Marshall, who was solicitor for the department from December, 1929, until March, 1933, wrote Wallace that "the tenor of your statements is to the effect that in making the (stockyards) order you merely followed precedents of the previous Administration. This is exactly what you did not do."

The Supreme Court invalidated an order by Wallace on June 14, 1933, reducing rates charged by commission men in the Kansas City Livestock Market. The court held that the commission men were not given sufficient opportunity to rebut findings of fact made by an examiner of the Agriculture Department.

Illinois Democrats End Party Dispute

Springfield, Ill., May 23 (AP).—A truce, looking toward the fall election campaign, united the Democratic factions of Illinois today.

Shunting aside their quarrel with Gov. Henry Horner, the rival group led by National Committeeman Patrick Nash and Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, joined in selection of Harry B. Hershey, of Taylorville, as State chairman of the party.

Hershey had been chosen ten days earlier by the Horner members of the State central committee. The two factions then met together and adopted a resolution praising President Roosevelt and Gov. Horner.

Banish Gloom To Bring Boom, Roper Advises

Slump Would End in 30 Days, Commerce Secretary Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, May 23.—The country "could be out of the stalemated situation in 30 days if production, manufacturing and distribution groups joined in a fight against gloom, despair and defeatism," Secretary Roper asserted in an address here today.

Calling on all branches of business to stick to the middle of the road in thought and action, or the "give and take" rule, he said:

Speaks Over Radio.

"We should be kept consciously reminded of the tendency to dwell either upon the mountain peak of unguarded optimism or in the depth of despair of uncontrolled pessimism."

Following this address before the annual convention of the American Association of Purchasing agents, Secretary Roper delivered a second address, broadcast over a national hookup, at a meeting of the Central Mississippi Valley Foreign Trade Conference in which he discussed America's reciprocal trade agreement program of the past five years.

"Actual results of the trade treaties are distinctly gratifying," he declared. "There is no greater fallacy than the belief that foreign trade is neither necessary nor desirable.

"An adequate restoration of foreign trade . . . would go further toward balancing of the Federal budget than any other single measure."

Touching upon "home problems," the Commerce Secretary stated the time has come for trade associations to work out a high standard of trade procedures "and then either convert to such standards the willful minority or force them out of the business."

Guffey Calls Pa. Democrat Peace Conference Here

Harrisburg, Pa., May 23 (AP).—A conference that may decide whether Pennsylvania's Democrats are to be welded into a peaceful unit for the November election was called today by United States Senator Joseph F. Guffey, leader of an unsuccessful insurgent primary fight.

Summond to the parley in Washington, D. C., State Treasurer F. Clair Ross, campaign manager for the ticket backed by Guffey and John L. Lewis, was emphatic in a prediction that a policy would be adopted.

Board Ponders Stocking Needs Of Beauticians

Employers, Workers Differ on Yearly Requirement at Wage Hearing.

The question of how many stockings a beauty operator can wear out in a year occupied the minimum wage board yesterday.

Representatives of the employes declared no self-respecting operator would think of attempting to get through a year on less than 52 pairs. Representatives of employers said 24 pairs should be plenty.

Mrs. Betty Anderson, replying for employes, said starch used in uniforms and chemicals used in the profession accounted for at least one pair a week.

At board session today colored women beauty shop employes will ask a separate minimum wage.

Two "surprise" budgets were submitted to the wage conference yesterday. Previously, employer representatives had submitted a budget estimating the cost of living for beauty parlor employes at $17 per week. Colored employers, not represented yesterday, asked a $12.77 weekly wage for their employes.

The conference immediately decided to set aside today for the discussion of the proposed budgets for colored employes. Employe representatives asked for a $22.30 weekly budget. Colored employes submitted a budget estimating the cost of living at $14.47 a week.

Kenneth Bennett, employer representative, asked the conference to allow employers to supply uniforms "at $1 a week," as was allowed under the terms of the public housekeeping order. The employes have asked for four uniforms per year at a total cost of $12. The employers have alloted three uniforms at a total cost of $6 per year.

Power Production In '37 at New High

Power production in the United States during 1937 increased 9 per cent over the previous year's figure to an all-time high of 121,049,630,000 kilowatt hours, the Federal Power Commission reported tonight.

Hydro-electric power accounted for 43,702,000,000 kilowatt-hours, or 36 per cent of the total.

The report showed that electricity was produced by 1,659 companies operating 3,793 plants. Of this number, 665 companies were privately owned, 868 municipally owned. Kilowatt-hour production of private utilities increased from 36,623,784 in 1920 to 108,776,592 in 1937, while production for municipally-owned plants increased from 1,509,558 to 5,179,363 over the same period. 'NumbersKing' Describes How Racket Works

Admits to Revenue Board Here He 'Violated the Laws of Virginia.'

Describing his "numbers" business, Harry L. Donovan, of Richmond, yesterday admitted to the Board of Tax Appeals that he was "violating the laws of Virginia every racing day."

The Bureau of Internal Revenue is attempting to collect from Donovan income taxes for the years 1933, 1934 and 1935. The amount involved was estimated at about $185,000.

Donovan was ultimately sustained by Sam B. Hill in his refusal to reveal the secret address of his Richmond headquarters. "That would be the same as sending my men to jail," he said.

Donovan testified that he reported a gross income of $5,000 for 1934 and $7,800 for 1935, but he said his business was far greater in 1936.

Records Lacking.

Contending that Donovan's income was larger than reported, Government attorneys were handicapped by lack of records. The books on which bets on numbers were written, Donovan said, often were stolen, confiscated by police, destroyed or carried off by employes to rival operators.

On direct examination by T. Nelson Parker, Richmond attorney, Donovan said a "writer" solicited business from the general public by picking up bets as little as 1 cent. Most of the bets were 5, 10 and 15 cents.

The next step, he tesified, is carried out by a "pickup man," whose duty is "to contact the writer, pick up tickets and bring them to the banker's office." The winning number is determined, he said, from pari-mutuel figures at race tracks. The figures are telegraphed to an office in Richmond, Donovan said, "and they relay the returns to us."

The witness said he paid 500 to 1 except when competition forced him to pay 600 to 1. He added that there was no profit at the latter figure.

He said 50 per cent of his gross was used in paying on winning numbers. Another 30 per cent, he said, went to his operators. He estimated the gross "play" on his first day in 1933 at $15, but added that six months later it was $50 a day.

Parker said testimony given by Donovan for the board could not be used against him in State courts.

Girl, 2, Sleeps 59 Days With Eyes Open

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Unmindful of her mother, Mrs. Daniel F. Reardon, 2-year-old Mary Ellen Reardon, of Chicago, blonde and blue-eyed like her favorite doll, slept yesterday with her eyes wide open 59 days after she first dropped into a deep slumber just after recovering from a case of measles.

Presbyterians Reject 2 Moves To Oppose War

Assembly Refuses to Discard 'Moral Justification' Clause of Law.

By the Associated Press.

Meridian, Miss., May 23.—Southern Presbyterians made additional changes in their church confession of faith today, set up a commission in each presbytery to pass upon pastorate changes, but declined to act on an application for automatic retirement of ministers at 70.

A proposed change to eliminate from the church law "moral justification" for war was voted down 234 to 75 after a substitute to justify only a defense war was defeated, 165 to 138.

Catholic Reference Changed.

The assembly, on an unrecorded vote, modified two sections of its confession of faith to eliminate words concerning Roman Catholics. One section which said those of the "reformed religion" should not marry with "infidels, papists or other idolaters," was changed to "infidels, Romanists or any idolaters."

Another section said the "Pope of Rome" was "the anti-Christ; that man of sin, that son of perdition" was revised to read: ". . . and that claim of any man to be the vicar of Christ and the head of the church is without warrant in fact or in Scripture, even anti-Christian, an usurpation dishonoring the Lord Jesus Christ."

Further Study Ordered.

The subject of ministerial retirement, one of the major internal issues before the seventy-eighth assembly of the church, was recommitted to the ad interim committee on changes in pastorates for further study.

Two Boston Brokers Indicted for Fraud

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission reported yesterday that the Federal Grand Jury in Boston, Mass., had indicted two individuals for fraudulent practices in connection with the brokerage business of Albert Emerton & Co. Those indicted were Albert Emerton and James Bottis, both of Boston.

The indictment alleges that the defendants operated a general brokerage business in which the orders were bracketed.

The SEC also reported that Bradley, Ellner Co., Inc., of Chicago, and its two principal executive officers, David P. Bradley and Louis A. Ellner, had been permanently enjoined from selling securities and from transacting business as brokers and dealers in violation of the fraud provisions of the securities act of 1933 and the securities exchange act of 1934.

Britain Deported Her as Spy, Stranded U. S. Woman Reveals

Mrs. Eve C. Bickford, of Buffalo, N. Y., was denied entrance into England Saturday on her arrival by airplane from Berlin on charge of being a spy. Today she said she was stranded in Berlin unable to get immediate aid. She is the wife of Gen. H. C. Bickford, wealthy realtor.

Wife of Gen. Bickford, Wealthy Buffalo Realtor, Unable to Obtain Immediate Aid, Says She Faces Berlin Debtor's Prison.

By the United Press.

London (Tuesday), May 24.—Mrs. Eve Clayton Bickford, attractive American woman who was refused entry into Britain Saturday when she arrived by airplane from Berlin, told the Daily Mail by telephone today from Berlin that "immigration officials suggested I might be a spy."

"I was accused of being a spy," she said, "as I have many friends in the army and air force and also in influential business and political circles.

Stranded in Berlin.

"I was asked how I got to know them and was not believed when I said 'socially.' Then I was asked how I lived, and when I replied that I received an allowance from my husband on the 19th of every month, I was not believed and it was insinuated that I was living from the proceeds of a secret agent's work.

"Here I am now stranded and without money. All my clothes are in London. Why they will not let me go to London is a mystery to me. I am desperate.

"First, authorities at Croydon Airfield required me to show I had means to support myself in London and, naturally, it being 10 p. m. I could not produce any. Then they cross-examined me until 1 a. m. Sunday regarding my friends.

"My friends, Nina and Percy Kirke went to Copenhagen from Berlin and I cannot reach them. I have no other friends in this country, which incidentally is most expensive, so my last hope is the United States consulate.

"The flying woman with whom I share an apartment in London telephoned me that she was unsuccessful in making representations at the home office and I cannot get papers to her which would enable her to send money. So for the moment it looks like the debtor's prison for me."

The Daily Express said that Mrs. Bickford is the wife of Gen. H. C. Bickford, wealthy realtor of Buffalo, N. Y., and added that he had telephoned her from the United States Monday.

Unidentified Man 30th Auto Fatality

Efforts were still being made last night to identify the body of a colored man who was killed by an automobile in the 1500 block Kenilworth avenue northeast, early yesterday.

The death—the first during the past 30 days—raised the District total to 30 for this year. Last year's total at this time was 48. Police took into custody Marvin G. Nalley, 20, 708 K street northeast, driver of the car, pending an inquest.

Gunmen Hired To Bar Harlan Union, Says U.S.

Government Charges Kidnaping, Murder; Jury Completed.

By the Associated Press.

London, Ky., May 23.—Picturing Harlan County's coal field as a hotbed of terrorism, kidnaping and murder, Assistant United States Attorney General Brien McMahon told the jury hearing the labor conspiracy trial today the Government would prove Harlan coal operators hired "gun thugs" to keep unionism out of the county.

"The Government will show that the accused operators contributed as much as $2,000 in a single month for use of Ben Unthank, the association's chief field deputy, in keeping union organizers out of the county," declared the stocky prosecution chief.

"Threaten, Beat, Kill."

"The Government holds no brief for any union—company or outside—we are interested only in the fact that there has been a violation of the laws of the United States," McMahon told the jury.

Reading the indictment, he emphasized the phrase:

". . . To threaten, beat and kill the same employes," repeated several times through the document.

At 4 p. m. Federal District Judge H. Church Ford granted the defense until tomorrow morning to prepare its opening statement.

The jury was completed with the selection of two alternates within a half hour after court reconvened today after a week-end recess.

Surprise Plea Made.

A surprise plea of nolo contendere was made for the Clover Splint Coal Co., one of 20 corporate defendants, by Charles S. Dayton, Charleston, W. Va., counsel, and Armstrong R. Matthews, executive of the company.

The move did not affect the standing of Matthews as a defendant. Besides Matthews, there are 21 other coal company executives and 22 law officer defendants on trial.

'Buddy,' Original 'Seeing-Eye' Dog, Succumbs at 11

Morristown, N. J., May 23 (AP).—Buddy, the first "seeing eye" dog, died today at the feet of the blind master she had guided for ten years by land and sea, train, subway and plane.

Eleven and a half years old, the German police dog died of complications due to old age. Morris S. Frank, pioneer in the movement to train dogs to guide the blind, and vice president of the "Seeing Eye" School here, said he was broken up by the loss of Buddy. He hadn't given a thought to training a successor.

PlaneDropping Money Called Corcoran Ideal

He Suggested It for RFC, Amos Pinchot Says in Letter to President.

Into the Congressional Record yesterday went a charge that scattering money from airplanes, to be picked up by anybody needing cash, had once been suggested as an ideal thing by Thomas Corcoran, Presidential adviser.

A copy of a letter from Amos Pinchot, New York attorney, declaring the suggestion had been advanced to him by Corcoran, was put into the record by Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire. The letter, it appears, was originally written to President Roosevelt.

Pinchot wrote that he used to be "a warm admirer of your Administration," but made plain his opposition to the pump-priming recovery program. He said that he met Corcoran in 1933 in a New York hotel and was consulted on his willingness to accept an appointment as a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Declining on the grounds of lack of training and experience, he said there ensued this conversation:

"Mr. Corcoran replied that, so far as training and experience are concerned, I need not worry. All that was required was an obstinate man who would stand up in the meetings of the Reconstruction Finance Board and oppose the policies of the chairman, Mr. Jesse Jones, who, he explained, was disposing of Government funds in stingy fashion. And, in particular, he was refusing to part with public money unless he believed there was a fair chance of getting it back.

"Such a policy," Mr. Corcoran maintained, "dictated as it was by business considerations, was precisely what the situation did not demand. He said the right way to restore buying power and bring recovery was to pour money into circulation in the greatest possible quantities at the highest possible speed. And to illustrate his point he remarked that the ideal thing would be for fleets of airplanes to fly over the country discharging money as they went so that anybody needing cash could pick it up from the ground."

House Vote for Horse Relief Spurs End of Army Auctions

House passage of relief and old-age security legislation for Government horses and mules has brought from Secretary Woodring a promise to change Army regulations to prevent sale of aged animals, it was learned yesterday.

Representative Byron B. Harlan (Democrat), of Ohio, has just succeeded in getting through the House a bill to provide for the old age of all Federal horses and mules. Instead of being sold when unfit for actual service, they would be put to pasture or, if necessary, destroyed.

Thus old animals after a lifetime of work for Uncle Sam would not be sold into private hands for overwork or mistreatment by new owners seeking to get the last bit of work out of them.

Secretary Woodring has told Congress Army regulations will be changed to carry out the intent of the bill and therefore it is unnecessary. But Harlan, now seeking Senate action, insists that other Government agencies must be made to recognize the claims of animals to a retirement status.

Roosevelt Cites Peace Policy in Maritime Note

Savannah's Crossing of Atlantic Commemorated by Nation.

The Nation observed Maritime Day yesterday—the 119th anniversary of the Savannah's first steam-powered crossing of the Atlantic Ocean—with the following developments:

President Roosevelt announced that the country's foreign trade program and shipping facilities demonstrated the United States' intention to promote world peace but cutting foreign trade barriers.

The Maritime Commission reported that contracts for 25 merchant vessels to cost $76,000,000 had started merchant marine replacements.

Joseph R. Sheehan, executive director of the Maritime Commission, declared in a speech at Boston that "the country is going to have a merchant marine, whether owned privately, owned by the Government and operated privately or owned and operated by the Government."

The President's word about the maritime situation came in a letter read by Commerce Secretary Daniel Roper over a Nation-wide radio hook-up.

As it announced the letting of the contracts, the Maritime Commission declared that 500 ships costing $1,250,000,000 were the minimum requirement for the next two years.

Chairman Emory S. Land predicted that 20 or 30 more ships would be contracted for by the end of the year.

Fraud Cases Sped By Guilty Pleas in Kansas City Vote

Kansas City, May 23 (AP).—The Government drive against 257 persons indicted for the 1936 vote fraud scandals here was carried today within sight of a clean docket by mass pleas and rapid sentences involving 52 persons.

The cases of about 12 persons remained after Judge Albert L. Reeves handled a "field day" in his court and declared, in passing sentences, that only "minions and puppets" were receiving the punishment.

The sentences ranged up to seven months in jail and the fines up to $1,000.

Today's pleas brought the Government score, as yet unbroken by an acquittal, to 83 convictions, 32 pleas of guilty and 142 of no contest.

Molten Metal Blast Kills 3 and Injures 3

Captain Drowns, Six Are Saved in Lake Erie Storm

Buffalo, N. Y., May 23 (AP).—Capt. John J. Daly, of a Coast Guard picket boat, reported tonight the rescue of six survivors of the tug L. P. Smith that capsized in a lake Erie storm, and the drowning of its skipper, Capt. Ben McGrattan.

The survivors told Capt. Daly the tow lines leading to the barges fouled the propeller and the tug keeled over in the 38-mile wind. The crew was thrown into the water.

The four men taken off the tug were a United States inspector, Albert H. Seloske; William Barrett, Dan Foley and Martin Horan, members of the crew. Two men, Lawrence Sullivan and Oswald Campbell, were taken off the two barges the Smith was towing. Daly said the wind was blowing the barges into the breakwater.

The Smith belonged to the Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co.

Autopsy to Defer Wamplers' Trial

La Plata, Md., May 23 (AP).—A second autopsy on the body of Charles Adams, asked by attorneys for T. Morris Wampler and his wife, probably will be performed before date for trial of the Wamplers is set, State's Attorney Edward Edelen said today.

Under a court order, the autopsy must be performed by May 28, Edelen said.

Wampler, well-known criminal attorney in Washington, and his wife are charged with manslaughter in the death of Adams, 65-year-old handyman on their estate at Fenwick.

Grainhouse Blaze Lights La Plata

Special Dispatch to The Post.

La Plata, Md., May 23.—Fire in a storehouse of the La Plata (Md.) Milling and Supply Co., last night destroyed several thousand dollars worth of grain and threatened oil tanks.

Members of the La Plata Volunteer Fire Department fought for nearly an hour to bring the blaze under control.

Flames, which broke out shortly after 10 p. m., lighted the town. Witnesses reported two explosions during the height of the blaze.

Ind. Mule Has Colt; Her 3d, Says Owner

Columbus, Ind., May 23 (AP).—Mollie, a dark bay mule, nuzzled a tiny colt today. Horsemen say mules can't have offspring.

The colt is Mollie's, insisted William Mobley, proprietor of a stock farm where the colt was foaled. Mobley said it was the third foaling of the mule. The other offspring died.

Langdon Says He Attempted To Fix an Alibi

Limerick

at his home between 12 and 1 a. m. on the murder night.

Although his reason for establishing the alibi was rather hazy, Langdon said he had been told by a police official during earlier investigation of the case that he had accounted for all but an hour and a half of his movements that night. It was for this reason, he said, that he sought the testimony of Zimberg.

Assails Officers' Stories.

James Caporatta, a Government witness last week, said Langdon approached him about 4 a. m. the night Beulah was slain and requested similar support in establishing an alibi.

This, however, was denied by Langdon yesterday. He said he had not talked with Caporatta and knew him only slightly.

The defendant's testimony under cross-examination was marked with several near-clashes with Prosecutor Wilson. The stories of two policemen, who testified earlier that Langdon tried to conceal his movements on the murder night, were branded as false by the accused man.

Both officers reported that Langdon, on three different occasions, called from a patrol box near the Limerick home at 18 Nineteenth street southeast and asked to be "marked in" from other boxes several blocks distant.

Referring particularly to the testimony of Policeman William B. Watts, of the Fifth Precinct, Wilson said:

"Did you talk to Watts that night?"

"I did."

"You heard what he testified to here the other day?"

"I did."

"Was he telling the truth?"

"He was not."

Denies Reading Testimony.

At one point during the cross-examination, Wilson turned suddenly toward Langdon and shouted:

"Before you took the witness stand today, did you read over your testimony at the coroner's inquest?" (In 1931).

"I did not."

"Were you given a copy to read?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did you tell anything wrong at the inquest?"

"I was not under oath."

"Does it make any difference whether you are under oath in order to tell the truth?"

"It does."

"Then you would lie if not under oath?"

"To protect someone, yes."

With a remarkable display of memory as to streets and directions, Langdon recounted in detail the exact territory he covered on his beat the night of December 31 and related incidents he encountered. He admitted being near the Limerick house on three occasions—at 1:30 a. m., 3 a. m. and 3:51 a. m.

"Didn't you spend more time around the Limerick house than you did anywhere on your beat that night?" asked Wilson.

"I wouldn't say that, no."

Only in House Once.

Russell Kelley, chief defense counsel, placed his client on the stand soon after the trial resumed yesterday. Eagerly and almost before his attorney asked the question, Langdon denied he killed Beulah Limerick or even knew her.

"At any time that night were you in the Limerick house?" asked Kelly.

"No."

"Did you have any animus against Beulah Limerick?"

"No."

"Was she a friend of yours?"

"Absolutely not—she was no friend of mine."

"Did she ever assist you in the liquor business?"

"No."

"Were you ever intimate with her?"

"I was not."

Langdon said he was only inside the house on one occasion and that was on a police mission.

Prosecutor Wilson in his cross-examination, slammed a photograph of Beulah on the railing in front of the witness chair.

"Did you ever see that woman in the house?" he asked Langdon.

"I don't know who she is, and I don't recall ever seeing her."

Relates "Obscene" Incidents.

He once saw a girl he took to be Beulah Limerick on a rear porch of the house, Langdon said, but that's as close as he ever got to her.

The stocky defendant, tracing his connections with the "mystery house," told of looking through the windows at various times, hearing snatches of conversation and witnessing numerous "obscene" incidents, which he described sketchily.

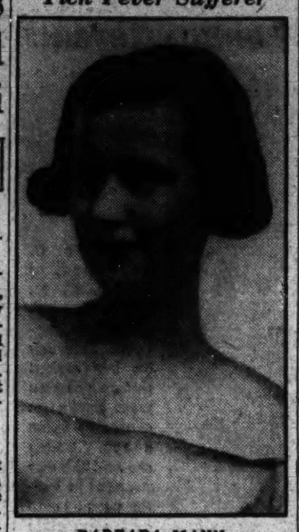
He freely admitted operating an illicit liquor business when he was a policeman and the morning of the murder went off duty an hour early without permission in order to deliver a case of whisky to a customer.

When he was placed on guard duty in the Limerick house the night following Beulah's death, Langdon said he was visited by a newspaper reporter who wanted to "look things over." The request was refused and after the reporter left, Langdon decided to do some investigating of his own accord.

It was then, he said, that he discovered the bullet hole in the mattress and under the death bed. He also told of finding a piece of cardboard beneath the mattress. This, too, he said, was punctured by a bullet hole.

He was uncertain what happened to the cardboard and wasn't sure whether he had shown it to officers who investigated the case.

Tick Fever Sufferer



BARBARA MANN, 13-year-old student at Gordon Junior High School, was reported ill with spotted fever yesterday, the third victim of the disease reported to the health department during the last two weeks. Her father, L. B. Mann, of Lyon Park, Va., a Government worker, said she was bitten while playing in some woods near her home about a week ago. Physicians reported the girl to be out of danger.

South Battles Wage-Hour Bill Vainly in House

Wages

By the overwhelming total of 322 votes for to 73 against, the bill at last was jerked from the Rules Committee pigeonhole, where it has rested.

Party lines vanished in the rush of members to get on the bandwagon. The vote:

For:
Democrats, 249.
Republicans, 62.
Progressives, 7.
Farmer-Labor, 4.
Total, 322.
Against:
Democrats, 53.
Republicans, 20.
Total, 73.

The bill is of the "escalator type," setting 25 cents per hour as the minimum wage for the first year, with this graduated up for three years until the 40-cent limit is reached; and establishing the 44-hour maximum work week for the first year, with this graduating down for two years until the 40-hour limit is reached.

A leader of the Southern opposition to the measure, who overheard Rayburn telling reporters of the plans to expedite the final vote, said:

"That's right. No use prolonging it. We're licked and we know it."

House leaders were split on the question of adding differentials to the bill to permit more flexibility in its administration, so that areas with low living standards could be brought under its operations more gradually. But all admitted that amendments to that effect, to be presented today in different forms by Representatives Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, and Dies (Democrat), of Texas, will be defeated despite considerable support.

During the first wave of debate over adopting the rule, Representative Dies attacked the measure hotly as unconstitutional and as likely to add "millions to the relief rolls," shouting:

"This bill either will become a law or it will be stricken down by the Supreme Court."

The full effect of his attack was dissipated somewhat by the murmured laughter of members when a heavy rain that spattered on the chamber's glass roof leaked through in a steady stream directly on Speaker Bankhead's desk. Dies concluded as the Speaker sent out an emergency call for blotters, towels and glasses to catch the heavy trickle.

Representative Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, one of the few "Deep South" members to support the measure, drew the issue sharply when he said:

"No lower wages are paid anywhere in the United States than in my district. This is a sectional bill, but I want the people of my district to get as good wages as the people do in the North or the West. It is true that the South has been persecuted by a tariff for 100 years and now by the wrong kind of freight rates. But I come before you now and say:

"'O. K., I throw in with you people from the North and the West; I will vote with you, but I want you to give my people in the South a square deal on freight rates and all the rest.'"

As Administration leaders sped debate on the bill (Barkley predicted a vote by tomorrow night), the Reconstruction Finance Corporation announced it was making industrial loans under its new $1,500,000,000 authorization at a faster rate than ever before in its history.

Leaders Frame New Fight for PWA Power Aid

Spend

fight to eliminate all restrictions on PWA money for public power systems.

Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, said opponents of the PWA curb, led by Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, and Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, had agreed "to fight this thing to the last ditch."

Adams Backs Move.

But Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Deficiencies sub-committee which adopted the competition curb, said the Barkley substitute "tends to improve the committee amendment." He said he thought it "removes many of the objections that have been made to it."

Meanwhile, another committee amendment, providing $212,000,000 for farm price parity payments to cotton, wheat and corn farmers, cast a shadow of a new tax bill next session across the Senate.

Following his White House visit, Barkley said he thought there was little doubt the Senate would approve appropriation of parity price funds, but if it does so, and the House concurs in it, "we will need a new tax bill next January."

Fears Process Tax.

"Just what taxes would be proposed to make up the $212,000,000 I, of course, can't say," commented Barkley, "but I assume they would take the form of processing taxes."

Senator Pope (Democrat), of Michigan, offered a processing tax amendment to the 1938 revenue bill, but it was rejected by the Senate Finance Committee.

As debate on the latest version of the President's spending-lending program opened in the Senate, Senator Vandenberg proposed return of control over relief to the States, with Federal grants to help meet the cost. Paralleling the House minority relief proposal, the Vandenberg amendment provides for actual distribution of relief funds through "nonpartisan" boards in the States.

Hopkins Is Assailed.

The Michigan Republican assailed Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, who he said had rejected his amendment "without even reading it." He called Hopkins "a big bureaucrat who has intoxicated himself with too much power."

Hopkins had called Vandenberg's "decentralization of relief" proposal "just another Republican plan and as such no good."

"That is a fine display of the relief non-partisanism to which he gives lip service," Vandenberg told the Senate.

Alternative Proposed.

"My proposed alternative may deserve the 'repudiation' which Mr. Hopkins bespeaks. If it lacks intrinsic merit, that should be its fate. But so long as we are spending four, five, six, seven billions of dollars of the peoples' money each year in one or another form of relief, and so long as we must continue to risk the whole public credit of the Nation in such enterprise, every earnestly offered program is entitled to respectful and constructive attention. Every citizen, even a 'Republican,' is entitled to be heard before it is too late."

Administration Democrats voiced prompt opposition to the Vandenberg amendment. Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, called it "a return to the dole" and Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, said the amendment would "turn money over to State political machines."

Connally took the floor in a lengthy rebuttal after the Michigan Republican had held it for two hours. He discussed Vandenberg's voting record on relief appropriations and challenged Vandenberg's statement that he had voted against past relief bills "in the form in which they were presented."

Chairman Mary Norton in opening debate pointed out that more than 2,000,000 workers are employed in industries affecting interstate commerce who are "suffering from starvation wages and overlong hours."

"You'll Regret It."

She pledged that her bloc would stand against all amendments, with exemptions suggested.

Representative Eugene E. Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, took floor command for the opponents, but it was Representative Sam D. McReynolds (Democrat), of Tennessee, the background generalissimo of the opposition who made the major speech of the day against the bill. McReynolds pleaded with the members not to pass the bill, roaring:

"You'll regret the day this bill goes through as sure as God made little apples, and you can put that in your pipe and smoke it!"

Representative Carl E. Mapes (Republican), of Michigan, one of the few Republicans to take a strong position against the measure, declared: "This legislation is neither in the interests of labor nor of the Nation as a whole. This should be called a face-saver rather than a wage-hour bill. It will increase unemployment.

Major test of the strength of the coalition backing the bill will come today on the so-called "Grange" amendment. This amendment, sponsored by the National Grange, would exempt from the bill's operations all farm industries, meat packing, and agricultural processing.

An attempt also will be made by Representative Lawrence Connery (Democrat), of Massachusetts, to insert flat 40-40 standards in the bill, stripping it of the escalator features.

Doctrine of State Immunity to Federal Tax Is Sharply Narrowed by Supreme Court

Tax

hibitions for which an admission fee is charged."

Although the court still left undetermined Federal tax immunity claimed by the rank and file of State employes, taken together the decisions cut a swath into the wide field of State tax exemptions. Justice Stone said there are "cogent reasons why any constitutional restriction upon the taxing power granted to Congress should be narrowly limited."

But Stone in differentiating between "essential" and "non-essential" State functions qualified the Federal taxing power short of President Roosevelt's insistence that under the sixteenth amendment Congress can tax salaries and interest on securities of States and all income "from whatever source derived."

Black in Agreement.

While concurring in Stone's finding, Justice Black advanced some of the President's own arguments and insisted that "the Constitution contains no imperative mandate that public employes—or others—drawing equal salaries (income) should be divided into taxpaying and non-taxpaying groups."

Unlike Stone, Black declared "there is not, and there cannot be, any unchanging line of demarcation between essential and nonessential governmental functions."

Black called for a review by the court of "the entire subject of intergovernmental tax immunity" in the light of the sixteenth amendment, which he declared was broad enough to impose taxes uniformly on all.

Both Justices Butler and McReynolds vigorously dissented from Stone's majority finding and Black's concurring opinion. The two justices declared the court was overruling "a century of precedents."

"As they stood when the cases now before us were in the Circuit Court of Appeals, our decisions required it to hold that the salaries paid by the Port Authority to respondents are not subject to Federal taxation," they said.

Butler and McReynolds contended the court was now substituting for former immunity doctrines "the proposition that, although the Federal tax may increase cost of State governments, it may be imposed if it does not curtail functions essential to their existence."

They argued that "so far as concerns liability for Federal income tax, the salaries paid by the Port Authority to its officers and employes are not distinguishable from salaries paid by States to their officers and employes."

See No Limitation.

He said the Court should have held in line with past decisions that States are without power under the Constitution to tax instrumentalities of the United States and that the Federal Government is without power to tax the salary of a State officer.

Stone, in his major finding, pointed out that the Constitution contains no limitation on the power either of a State or the National Government to tax the other, and the doctrine of immunity stems from McCulloch versus Maryland.

In that famous case it was held that a tax laid specifically upon the privilege of issuing bank notes was invalid, since it impeded Constitutional powers of the Federal Government.

He pointed out that the Court in Collector vs. Day had restricted Federal taxing powers by holding the salary of a State officer, a probate judge, was immune from the Federal income tax. But he said in that case State immunity was "narrowly limited" to a State judicial officer engaged in an essential State function.

Stone said he expressed no opinion whether a Federal tax may be levied on the Port Authority itself and ruled only "that the present tax neither precludes nor threatens unreasonably to obstruct any function essential to the continued existence of the State government." If immunity was granted, he said, it would restrict the Federal Government's Constitutional taxing power "to an inadmissible extent."

In ruling, in effect, that college football is a business, and university athletic events for profit are subject to the Federal admission tax, Justice Roberts affirmed the legality of some $1,000,000 in Federal admissions taxes collected yearly.

Roberts said that "the immunity implied from the dual sovereignty recognized by the Constitution does not extend to business enterprises conducted by the States for gain."

Warning of "the destruction of the Federal power to tax that might result from a contrary decision," he cited a former court finding that framers of the Constitution "never thought that the States, by extending their functions, could practically destroy it."

Justice Black concurred "in the result" of the football decision, but Justices Butler and McReynolds again sharply dissented.

"So far as concerns the validity of the tax, the university is the State," said these two justices. "It is an instrumentality carrying on the State's program of public education. The holding of the athletic contests in question is an integral part of that program and does not cease to be such because it produces income. The tax is imposed directly on and burdens that activity of the State."

As the two court decisions broadened the Federal taxing power in a field hitherto considered immune, the Senate Finance Committee voted for a Congressional study of the whole question of tax exemptions as they affect Federal, State and municipal securities and salaries. The committee favorably reported a bill by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, providing for a joint study by a committee of six Senators and six representatives, to report back to Congress not later than February 1, 1939.

Kennedy, Landis Sued for Million By Oil Operator

A suit for $1,000,000 damages against Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of Securities and Exchange Commission and now United States Ambassador to London; James M. Landis, former commissioner, and two present commissioners was filed yesterday in District Court by J. Edward Jones, wealthy Scarsdale (N. Y.) promoter.

Jones, an oil producer-operator, successfully fought a two-year legal battle with the SEC over his royalty business and later was acquitted of Federal Court charges of using the mails to defraud.

The suit was directed against the Commissioners, George C. Matthews and Robert C. Healy, and the two former commissioners, alleging they had entered into "conspiracy to make and cause to be made false allegations that the plaintiff's registration statement was deficient and was not in compliance with the statutes of Congress."

Good Advice About Constipation!

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with any ailment is to get at its cause. If you're constipated, don't fiddle with makeshift remedies. Find out what's giving you the trouble!

Chances are you won't have to look very far, if you eat just the things most people do. Most likely, you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean just a lot of food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If this is what you lack, your ticket is crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains the "bulk" you need plus the intestinal tonic, vitamin B₁.

Eat it every day, drink plenty of water, and join the "regulars"! All-Bran is made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Employes in cafeterias operated by the Welfare and Recreation Association in 22 Federal Buildings here will vote today and tomorrow to determine whether the United Cafeteria Employes Industrial Union (C. I. O.) is their choice as a bargaining agent. The election is the first step toward ending a four-month-old row between the employes and the management.

The referendum, to be conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, was agreed to by the Welfare and Recreation Association upon suggestion from Secretary Ickes, to whom the employe-management row was taken by the employes' union.

The first ballotts will be cast today between 9 and 9:40 a. m. in the North Interior Building, Eighteenth and F streets, northwest. Thereafter, NLRB officials, headed by NLRB Examiner Robert Kenadler, will move the balloting to other buildings on a precisely-fixed schedule. On Wednesday, the balloting will begin at 1:30 and continue to 3:30 p. m.

The balloting will be in strictest secrecy.

More than 500 employes are expected to vote. The controversy between the employes and the management centers chiefly in the employes' complaint that the management has failed to recognize the UCELIU as the bargaining agent. There has been a considerable squabble over wages, hours and general working conditions and these problems will be attacked as soon as the election proves who the employes want to bargain for them.

Another note on the tide of telegrams that stopped the reorganization bill: Representative Byron Scott (Democrat), of California, believed the name of the bill had something or very much to do with its defeat. He was told by constituents that they wouldn't support a bill that aimed at reorganizing the Government from its present democratic system . . . And he, like all the others, was amazed at how many people signed the telegrams or letters without having the slightest notion of what was really in the bill or even without reading the telegrams or letters they signed . . . The U. F. W. A. has spotted, and pounced on, a situation, as follows:

Certain agencies have been and still are leting out tabulating work to a private business machine company when machine tabulation divisions of the Federal agencies are equipped to do the work . . . And worse, at least one machine tabulation division—that in the Labor Department—has been letting out employes because of the lack of work.

Tonight the National Park Service will dramatize over Station WOL (6:30 o'clock) the story of an amazing occurence in Death Valley. This will be a program in the NPS "America's Hours of Destiny Series." The story to be told is of the Bennett-Arcane party, lost in the desolate valley for months in 1849-50.

The little party of Westward-bound gold seekers, two men, two women and four children, were rescued through the stamina and strength of two young scouts, Lewis Manly and John Rogers, who walked 750 miles through trackless, waterless wasteland to find a way out of the valley. When finally, they reached safety and the sight of green grass and water ahead, the two turned back for one last look at the valley and Manly exclaimed: "Goodlby, Death Valley," giving the region the name it has since retained. A cast for the portrayal comes from the Washington Civic Theater, as follows: Lois Alexander, Dorothea Lewis, Harry Westcott, George Buchanan, Robert M. Miller, William Rownd, Robert Duke, Harrison Libbey, Ted Field, Joe Bourne, Frank Gaunt and Edward Stevlingson.

Vital D. C. Bills.

Defeat of several bills of vital interest to Washington is threatened because of the encroachment of the wages-and-hours bill upon District day in the House. In fairness to the local community, the House should make special arrangements for consideration of these measures. It should not be necessary for Chairman Palmisano of the District Committee to rely upon unanimous consent action when the day customarily devoted to District legislation has been devoted to other purposes.

Among the most important bills awaiting action is that authorizing the District Commissioners to borrow funds and accept grants from the PWA on equal terms with other communities. If the vast spending program is approved, this measure will be essential to prevent gross discrimination against the District. Yet the bill has not even been considered by the District Committee. An emergency meeting to speed it to the House calendar seems to be essential.

Of at least equal importance are the proposed amendments to the Alley Dwelling Act. Fortunately these have approval of the House Committee, but they must also be passed upon by the Senate.

On two other desirable measures legislative action is almost complete. The lunacy bill, eliminating barbarous practices in the commitment of insane persons to mental hospitals for treatment, has passed the Senate and won indorsement in the same form by the House District Committee. All that is needed is consent of the House that it be sent to the President for signature. The House rejected the conference report on the taxicab liability bill. It would be a pity to let the bill fail, however, because of the relatively minor differences between the two chambers.

Action on all the pending District measures cannot be expected. In the case of the fair trade bill a hasty decision would be most unfortunate. Some others can be delayed without any serious disadvantage. But the bills already referred to, with the possible addition of the proposed amendments to the zoning law, ought to be recognized as being essential to the well-being of the Capital City for which Congress is solely responsible. Full allowance for their enactment should be made by both the House and Senate in fixing the date for adjournment.

Another Crisis Weathered.

After another highly critical week-end, tensions and passions in Europe have again subsided, once more the forces working for peace have proved their underlying strength.

To be sure, it is too early to be complacent over what may prove to be only a temporary easing of the far-reaching German-Czechoslovak crisis. The situation in Central Europe remains loaded with dynamite, with Czechoslovakia sitting on the barrel. For as long as that nation retains its sovereignty and independence it remains a potential barrier to the successful completion of the Drang nach Osten policy on which Germany is now embarked.

Nonetheless, it is noteworthy that alarmist reports of an impending German military thrust in the direction of Czechoslovakia were not borne out by developments. That may be because Hitler expects to accomplish by peaceful suasion all and more than could be gained by conquest. But it is equally possible that Germany held her hand because, as the situation developed, it became apparent that military measures against Czechoslovakia would have boomerang characteristics.

The Prague government, while preserving a very remarkable calm, took no chances. In the face of a highly threatening situation, Czechoslovakia called one class of reserves to the colors and brought the garrisons along the frontier posts to full strength. There was no mistaking the determination of the government to fight to preserve the republic's independence and territorial integrity. And, unquestionably, this display of cool courage was greatly helped by constructive Anglo-French intervention in the election crisis.

Britain's mediatory efforts were not, however, limited to Berlin. For some time the London government has been urging Czechoslovakia to make every reasonable concession to the Sudeten Germans. On Sunday this element scored notable gains in Czechoslovakia's municipal elections. The returns will not diminish Henlein's demands. But while the Czechoslovak leaders are prepared to go a long way to satisfy the German-speaking minority there appears to be little readiness in Prague to make any agreement threatening to Czechoslovakia's independence.

The situation, therefore, remains troublesome. But there are grounds for optimism. The flare-up over the week-end has definitely destroyed the belief, held in some German quarters, that Czechoslovakia can be intimidated by a show of force. And it has revealed the readiness of Great Britain to work vigorously with her ally, France, in the interests of Central European peace.

No Horse And Buggy Here.

Those who argue that the Supreme Court is disinclined to give full weight to the importance of changing social conditions would do well to study yesterday's opinion on the Federal income-tax liability of employes of the Port of New York Authority. In the belief of the minority, Justices Butler and McReynolds, the judgment is one which "overrules a century of precedents." And while the majority opinion, delivered by Justice Stone, denies that assertion it nonetheless makes plain that the Court proposes to examine precedents—and if necessary discard them—in the light of current circumstance.

The basic issue involved in the case is the thorny subject of tax exemption, to which President Roosevelt a month ago devoted a special Congressional message. The New York Port Authority decision is not directly concerned with tax-exempt securities. It considers only the immunity of State officials from Federal taxation and vice versa. But some of the obiter dicta—the general observations—are of a character which gives support to the President's contention that legislation ending tax exemption would not require a Constitutional amendment.

Of course the Court does not specifically suggest this. Indeed it emphasizes that in the case of tax-exempt salaries there is a vital distinction, favoring the first, between Federal infringement on State sovereignty and State infringement on Federal sovereignty. Nevertheless the highest tribunal indirectly sustains the "hope," expressed by Mr. Roosevelt on April 25, "that these tax immunities are not inexorable requirements under the Constitution itself but are the result of judicial decision."

So far as its lengthy, and in places involved, reasoning can be baldly summarized the decision draws a distinction between State functions "without which a State could not continue to exist as a governmental entity" and State functions "which could be carried on by private enterprise." It is not definitely reaffirmed that employes in these basic functions of local government should be immune from Federal taxation. But it is definitely stated that this immunity should not extend to State employes in activities which are inessential for "the continued existence of the State government."

The minority opinion points out that this differentiation conflicts not merely with a long line of old decisions, but very directly with the verdict of the Supreme Court in the Brush case, a little over a year ago. The Court there held that an engineer in the employ of New York City's municipally-owned water system was not subject to Federal income tax. And the majority are evidently aware of the cogency of this criticism. In the words of Justice Stone:

> In a period marked by a constant expansion of government activities and the steady multiplication of the complexities of taxing systems, it is perhaps too much to expect that the judicial pronouncements marking the boundaries of State immunity should present a completely logical pattern.

It is unfortunate, for the clarity of the current decision, that in the Brush case the Government contended that a municipal water system is not an essential governmental function, and was overruled. This forces the Court in the present instance to do a good deal of logic-chopping on tax burdens which are "so indirect or conjectural as to be but an incident of the coexistence of the two governments, and therefore not within the constitutional immunity."

The court leaves the picture confused. An employe of a municipal water works is exempt from Federal taxation. An employe of a municipal port authority is not. Employes of basic State functions may be exempted. Employes of ancillary functions, which might be handled by private enterprise, should not be exempted.

Here is room for ceaseless litigation and endless differences of honest expert opinion. It is scarcely to be expected that the Supreme Court will thrash out one by one the subtle distinctions between what are basic and what are secondary activities of State governments. And for that reason a clarifying statute, as urged by the President, on the constitutionality of which the Court would have opportunity to pass as a unit, is brought much closer by yesterday's decision.

Advice From Tommy The Cork.

Maybe Tommy Corcoran was pulling Amos Pinchot's leg when he suggested to the latter back in 1933 that the way to cure the depression was to scatter money by airplanes "so that anyone needing cash could pick it up from the ground." Amos, like his Biblical namesake, was once a reformer and reformers are usually not over-gifted with a sense of humor.

But, on the other hand, Tommy may have meant it. Stranger plans than this attributed to him have not only been advanced but actually carried out in the halcyon period since 1933. What with seeking to harness the tides of Fundy and building summer resorts atop innaccessible mountain peaks and ploughing pigs under so that everyone would be richer, a share-the-wealth-from-the-skies scheme is not so far-fetched.

And besides, it has very respectable antecedents. The Greeks had a word for it—or at least a story. There was a lovely princess named Danae whose father had imprisoned her in a brass tower. Zeus, No. 1 god in the Greek pantheon, saw her, sympathized with her plight and visited her in the form of a golden shower.

It's a perfect parable. For Danae substitute the American people; for the brass tower the depression; for Zeus, who else but F. D. R.? And for the golden shower—well, look at the damn thing!

There is really no flaw in the parallel. The child of Danae and the golden shower was Perseus, slayer of Medusa, an ancient economic royalist.

For The Sake Of Recovery.

For Congress to vote huge sums to prime the pump of private industry and then hold over industry the threat of competition from governmentally subsidized agencies would be utterly illogical as well as unfair. The Senate Appropriations Committee recognized that fact when it approved an amendment to the spending-lending bill forbidding the use of PWA loans and grants for the construction of any project which would compete with existing privately owned power concerns.

Apparently the Administration is preparing to throw its influence on the side of fair play. That is indicated by Senator Barkley's willingness to accept the committee amendment, providing PWA loans might be advanced to duplicate private facilities after reasonable offers to purchase had been rejected. The reasonableness of such offer could not, however, be properly judged by the PWA Administrator as the Senator suggests.

A great deal more is involved in the controversy over the committee's amendment than the disposition of the large fund to be placed at the disposal of PWA Administrator Ickes. Whether he chose to employ much or little of this money to duplicate existing power facilities, the knowledge that he might do so if not restrained by law would effectually destroy the incentive to put new private capital into the utility industry.

In urging the insertion of safeguards against the uneconomic duplication of existing facilities, Philip H. Gadsden, representing the Committee of Utility Executives, emphasized the deterrent effect of such practices upon plans for capital expansion. He pointed out, for instance, that during the past five years since Government duplication began, the average amount of new capital obtained from the public by the utilities has amounted to less than 6 per cent of the annual average of the preceding ten years. The average annual amount of new construction since 1933, as distinct from new capital, has fallen to one-third of the average of the previous ten years.

This startling shrinkage in capital outlays cannot be attributed to lack of demand for the industry's products, because the consumption of power has exceeded all previous records during the past three years. The financial uncertainties resulting from passage of the holding company act has, of course, been an important contributory cause of investor reluctance to buy utility issues. Now the outlook for a satisfactory solution of the reorganization problems created by the "death sentence" clause seems brighter. But the constant threat of competition from governmentally subsidized power concerns remains as a serious obstacle to revival of investment confidence.

A reassuring declaration of general policy is needed to dispel such fears entirely. Nevertheless, acceptance by Congress of the protective amendment of the Senate bill, with reasonable qualifications, would do a great deal to allay anxiety. It would help to clear the way for revival of private financing in a field offering exceptionally large opportunities for creation of jobs.

What the Government might spend in developing publicly owned power projects would in any case fall far short of the amount investors could and no doubt would put into private power enterprises under favorable conditions. A policy that discourages private expansion necessarily retards industrial recovery instead of stimulating it. That seems to be an unanswerable argument in favor of an amendment safeguarding the private power industry against unfair competition from new subsidized plants.

"China's Bloodless Victory."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I am glad that "China's Bloodless Victory" did not escape the attention of the editor of The Post! That amazing trip shows how great China really is. Have any Christian nations of the world done anything to compare with that—showered leaflets upon a people whose armies are showering bombs upon women and children in a country that wishes to live in peace!

What did "Christian Britain" do in 1839, when the Emperor of China prohibited the importation of opium, when 100,000,000 of his subjects were users of this drug? She forced it upon them at gun points!

If the leaders of Japan's invading armies were not entirely bereft of humanitarian instincts, after this merciful visit of China's bombers, they would bow their heads in shame and say: "This carnage must stop. We can not slaughter such a people as this! We are losing something more precious than anything we can ever gain!"

And the great "powers" of the world sit calmly by, thinking only of their own safety, as they watch this world tragedy which is spreading a black and bloody cloud over this twentieth century! Japan is gaining a name for herself among the blackest and bloodiest on the pages of human history, and there are many in her own country who are not at all proud of it.

Before ending this I must compliment Mr. Elderman on his cartoon accompanying the fine editorial of the editor. It should be made into ribbon badges and pinned upon the uniform of every invading soldier in the Japanese army.

The Board's Reply.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

One cannot help observing the great amount of space devoted in newspapers to speeches and editorial comment criticizing the Wagner act and the National Labor Relations Board. Any speech which has the purpose of discrediting the act or the board is immediately seized upon and generally receives prominent space in the news column. Editorials in the same vein follow as a rule.

Your readers, after having read so much on one side of the matter, undoubtedly would have been interested to have known from a recent radio address by Mr. Madden, chairman of NLRB, that some 14,000 cases have been filed with the board. Of this number, thousands of cases were found after careful preliminary investigation to be unmeritorious, and the charges were either withdrawn or dismissed without a hearing. Thousands of other cases have resulted in amicable adjustment on the basis of compliance with the law. Thus the basis of the act as an instrument for promoting industrial peace is being maintained.

In only a relatively small number of cases has it been necessary to proceed to the bitter end in order to obtain compliance with the law. The board's record for success before the courts is exceeded by no other Government agency. In the 11 cases that have reached the United States Supreme Court, the board's position has been consistently sustained. And only several days ago the Supreme Court in the Mackay case has approved the procedure followed by the board.

Boycott In The South?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

One of the most interesting statements I have read recently appeared in The State and The News and Courier of today. Presumably the story was published in all our morning papers because it is an Associated Press release. It is to the effect that a number of business men of the South are planning to engage extensively in barter with countries of Europe and to boycott the industries of the North.

The interview is with a man of New York who has large interests in the South. Northern men who invest in the South are the bitterest opponents of such measures as the wages-and-hours bill.

Votes And Spending.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

New Deal leaders, knowing the cupidity of the electorate, deliberately take advantage of this fact by purchasing each succeeding election with Federal billions. Debauching the voters en masse by means of subsidies, pensions, bonuses, soil-conservation payments, the making of unreasonably high wages compulsory, etc., is political racketeering of the most brazen sort.

Herbert Hoover in a speech December, 1930, said: "Prosperity can not be restored by raids upon the public treasury." The late T. R., in his book, "The Strenuous Life," said: "No man can do evil and say it is justifiable on the grounds of expediency."

To the statement, "Politics is the rottenest business on earth," the average citizen will say, "Yes, but what can you do about it?" The answer is that nothing can be done about it as long as the voter continues to sell out to the highest bidder.

When millions of people are being carried on the backs of the rest of the population an upheaval of some kind is a sure thing sooner or later.

Sinclair And Atheism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is related that an East Indian once reminded a British bishop, who was trying to convert him, that what we know may be contained within a small circle and what we don't know is outside of this circle. Hence, in view of our most circumscribed knowledge it seems foolish and fatuous dogmatically to assert, as many do, that life is limited to this particular sphere and forever ends when the experience, called death, results. For all we may know to the contrary, worlds of broader dimensions, of higher vibratory rate, may surround us, while etheric bodies may actually interpenetrate these dull, imperfect physical instruments.

Upton Sinclair was asked in a letter if he could be numbered among the atheists. He replied: "I am sorry that I cannot lay claim to such difficult knowledge. Of course, if you mean by God the ancient tribal deity, I am quite sure that no such God as that exists and if that is what you mean by being an atheist, then I am one. But I feel quite sure that there must be a creative energy animating and directing the universe and I suspect that it knows more than I do and has purposes which I am not entirely able to understand. I think that it is possible to have such an idea without surrendering one's mind to any of the superstitions, whether theological or moral, which are found in the old tribal religions."

Silent Voters.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Proponents for District suffrage seem well satisfied over the results of the poll held recently, and point to the fact that 95 per cent were in favor of suffrage. I draw the opposite conclusions.

There are 400,000 voters in the District, only one-fourth of whom were interested enough to vote. My inference is that three-quarters of the city's population are either against the proposition or are so lukewarm about the whole thing that they don't give a darn one way or the other. Am I right?

War And Navy Buildings.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Whether or not a site has been decided upon for the new War and Navy Department buildings I do not know, but I suggest location of the two buildings directly to the south of the Treasury and State Department buildings between Constitution avenue and E street—the War Department along Seventeenth street and the Navy Department along Fifteenth street.

It would then place around the White House the "big four" of the Government departments—Treasury, State, War and Navy. Between the two buildings a park similar to Lafayette Park on the north of the White House and then Sherman's statue could be placed in the center of the square to be known as Sherman Square. Jackson place would run from H street to Constitution avenue and Sherman place would replace Madison place and run from H street to Constitution avenue.

With the Monument Grounds, East and West Potomac Park, the Mall and other small parks nearby this section of Constitution avenue between Fifteenth and Seventeenth streets is in my opinion most barren in appearance, and causes an unnecessary break in the buildings already along Constitution avenue. So much park land nearby is really park extravagance.

I think this is really the ideal location for the War and Navy buildings, far better than removing blocks and blocks of good taxable District property. And once the funds were on hand work could proceed at once without the necessity of tearing down buildings.

For Commissioner.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

As Maryland and the District of Columbia have many matters which concern both, our business relations are mutual. Naturally we are interested in which of the 12 proposed candidates will be the next District Commissioner.

The names of three good, sensible thoughtful women were mentioned, but judging from the result of the poll just held, it would be too troublesome a job for a woman, and a good man must be chosen.

The connections and following of some of the men are such that little could be gained by appointing them.

The most outstanding, public-spirited leader in every movement to benefit the people or the city in the last 20 years, especially for lower street car or bus fares, and electric and gas rates, which strike every home, is Mr. William McK. Clayton, resident of Washington, acceptable to the residents of Maryland, and I am sure the President would make no mistake in his appointment.

Employe Group Opinions.

Members of Commerce Lodge No. 9, A. F. G. Your editorial does certainly speak a timely word on a vital topic. It is to be hoped that your many readers will sense its significance.

National policies are certainly not fit subject matter for groups of personnel to decide how to handle. The Good Old Times.

SOME for the glories of this world; and some Sigh for the prophets' paradise to come . . .

and some, rejecting both, look longingly backward toward a golden age, a nostalgic never-never land of the past. Quite a few of our modern writers who belong to this latter group have gone so far as to name the age, placing the laurel of excellence on the twelfth century, the eighteenth, the Coolidge era, any time but our own. Most of the earlier writers, being more wary, set their happy land in a remote time and place—the Garden of Eden, an Island of Atlantis that lies beneath the sea.

Unsatisfied with this hand-kissing toward an irretrievable past, our present day wailers point out unmistakable signs of decadence in our own times. We hear that our characters have been hopelessly undermined, our moral fiber is a mere pulp, our civilization is sinking into an indescribable state of degeneracy. The old hobgoblin of fallen empires is waved before our eyes.

We should not, however, let our lives be seriously blighted by these prophecies of calamity. It has all been said before. One need only thumb casually through the writings of all ages to find here and there this same dyspeptic tone.

Geoffrey Chaucer (1340-1400) was apparently not at all pleased with the state of affairs in his times. It was particularly regrettable, since everything had formerly been so lovely. In his poem, "Lak of Stedfastnesse," he laments:

Some tyme this world was so stedfast and stable
That mannes word was obligacioun
And now hit is so false and deceivable . . .
In fact, things had come to such a pass that
The world has mad a permutacioun
Fro right to wrong, fro trouthe to fikelnesse
That al is lost, for lak of stedfastnesse.

We could hardly expect any improvement a century later. Clement Marot (1496-1544) in his "De l'amour du siecle antique" pines for the steadfast love of "the good old times" forever gone. When love, which has always meant so much to a Frenchman, has gone to pot, what is left?

John Donne (1573-1631) records mankind's further precipitous descent. In 1621 he wrote:

An Anatomie of the World
Wherein,
By occasion of the untimely death of Mistris Elizabeth Drury the frailtie and decay of this whole world is represented.

To quote from this melancholy work:

For had a man at first in forrests strayed
Or shipwrack'd in the sea one would have laid
A wager that an elephant or whale
That met him would not hastily assaile
A thing so equall to him: now alasse!
The fayries and pigmies well may pass
As credible; mankind decayes so soone,
We're scarse our father's shadows cast at noone.
A big drop from a whale to a pigmy.

Apparently toward the end of the seventeenth century taste was at a low ebb in England. Hear John Dryden in his "Prologue to the Loyal General":

The plays that take on our corrupted stage
Methinks, resemble the distracted age;
Noise, madness, all unreasonable things,
That strike at sense . . .

That ought to make any Hollywood producer green with envy.

Thomas Hutchinson, royal governor of Massachusetts, writing to the secretary of Lord Hillsboro in 1770, says, among many other uncomplimentary things about the Boston of that time, "We are sinking into perfect barbarism." A fine age indeed, if his excellency may be believed, in which to shape a new nation.

Goldsmith, who lived and died in the eighteenth century, writes of his own time those lines which so many of us learned with such justifiable incomprehension in high school:

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay . . .

James Russell Lowell, to pick at random an example from the nineteenth century, continues in the old nostalgic vein of the "ages glad, long ago." Alas! When were the "glad ages," the "good old times"?

It would be mere redundancy to quote examples of this yearning for the past and vilifying the present from our own writers. The thing, by accretion, has become a voluminous platitude.

Calamity is always with us, striking now here, now there. And every calamity has its prophet. But not with every gurgle in the dikes do the inhabitants of the Netherlands take to their boats; nor do the people of Pittsburgh become hysterical at the sight of smoke. Since the prophets of evil are ceaselessly wailing down through the ages, it is nothing remarkable that once in a while they hit. It speaks well for the forbearance of the Trojans that they did not toss Cassandra over the walls. It was doubtless very trying, as we can well surmise, to have somebody continually bellyaching around the place and getting in their hair when they were trying to stave off the Greeks.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

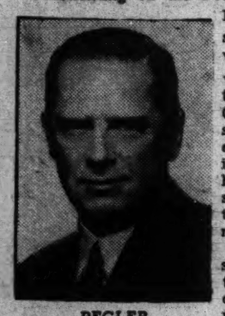
FOR THE BENEFIT of The Washington Post I would like to read a little lesson on sincerity and straight-shooting as opposed to Government shystering in the application of the law.

Commenting on the Federal investigation of the Hague dictatorship in Jersey City, the New York World-Telegram says: "It was essential and inevitable that the Federal Government should restrain Hague's high-handed regime, just as Federal income-tax prosecutions have handled other big shots who were too tough to be dealt with by ordinary means."



PEGLER.

I concede that the conspiracy law may apply to the Hague thing and to conspiracies by labor unions as well. But I claim that Al Capone, a big shot too tough to be dealt with "by ordinary means," is the victim of a shyster trick on the part of the Government. The Government couldn't prove against Capone any of the hundreds of sins, from loitering to murder, which were popularly attributed to him, so he was given 11 years for income tax fraud. Then, by way of revenge, not mere punishment, he was sent to Alcatraz to do it the hard way.

It is recognized that Capone is serving this term this way for various crimes which were not proved nor even formally charged. A precedent is thus established by which anyone who irritates the Federal Government, and more particularly the Department of Justice, may be put away and silenced and possibly shot dead with a rifle under the ley de fuega. Why not?

HOW DO we know what happens in Alcatraz under the secrecy imposed by the prison commissioner? What is the reason for this secrecy in a Federal bureau not concerned with delicate foreign relations or national defense? Suppose a man is sent to Alcatraz for a technical tax violation and then one day shot while trying to swim for it.

Who says he tried to swim for it? The guard says so. But how do we know he wasn't pushed into the water and shot for riddance?

I don't say he was pushed. But I do say the Department of Justice has had its share of crooks and political persecutors, and I suspect any department which stretches one law to punish a man for unprovable violations of other laws.

The Department of Justice was hot after Huey Long's gang for tax violations until Huey's death. Huey's boys might have been sent to Alcatraz for political obstreperousness under the tax law if Huey hadn't been killed and the cases, happily, solved by political compromise.

Nobody on earth can make out an honest income tax return, taking full advantage of his rights under the law, and not lay himself open to malicious, political charges of fraud. The experts of the Internal Revenue Bureau admit this, off the record. The law and the rulings are full of dishonest tricks and traps, and the bureau itself can and does employ trick constructions and blackjack rulings to extort money which isn't due. A citizen construes the law a certain way one year and is tripped and penalized by a bureau ruling. Next year he takes advantage of that ruling in a case which benefits him and is told that the ruling has been reversed.

Composed, as it is, of lawyer-politicians and cops, the Department of Justice never can be fully trusted to apply any law evenly and without personal or political animus. It is always open to suspicion, for the day of Harry Daugherty and Gaston Means isn't far gone, and the present conduct of the department cannot be judged until it has been exposed to the same kind of inspection.

THE WORLD-TELEGRAM further comments on the application of the Lindbergh law to the case of Norman Thomas, who was run out of Jersey City for trying to make a speech.

"The Government now recognizes that a forcible physical ejection may be kidnaping under the definition," the editorial says.

The Lindbergh law was intended to deter and punish actual kidnapers operating across State lines. There was no intention that it should apply to a simple case of bum's rush.

We had many rotten, shyster prosecutions under the Mann act adopted to abate commercial interstate vice. It was NOT intended to apply to "the sins that ye do, two by two," willingly and in the true amateur spirit, but it was so applied with worse discredit to the law and government than to the poor saps who were persecuted for the glory of cheap, ham district attorneys.

The law is in a hell of a way when it has to cheat to gain its ends.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

A Letter To A New Stock Exchange Boss.

Mr. William McChesney Martin, jr.,
New York Stock Exchange.

Dear Bill: I see where you have taken office as the head man of the committee to lift the face of the New York Stock Exchange and I don't know whether to congratulate you or send you a note of sympathy. Events have combined of late to make it tough for you on this particular job, but as you are only 31 years old you should have the necessary stamina.

* * * *

Being a boss of the stock exchange used to be like being first vice president of the Hunts Club, chairman of a greens committee or a director of the Kennel Club. All you had to do to get away with it was to look honest, never be photographed doing the big apple and act dignified in a falling market.

* * * *

It gave a man prestige and didn't do the stock market much harm. The job called for a middle-aged or elderly man with a conservative tailor, a gold tooth and a substantial expression.

* * * *

But "them days is gone forever," Mr. Martin. The stock exchange is now down on a level where the public thinks it has to be watched just like baseball, the movies and the cloak and suit industry, maybe a little closer, and you are to become practically the Judge Landis and Will Hays of the ticker business until a paid czar is chosen.

* * * *

Personally, I think Judge Landis has a cinch compared to the job of running the exchange, as baseball was always popular with the public and he didn't have to start from scratch and try to make it so. Baseball only had one or two big scandals in its history, but the stock exchange has been getting them right and left. Will Hays has a comparatively soft job, too. All he has to do is sit in a dark room and watch the Mae West releases.

* * * *

I see you are a Yale man, but I still ain't sure whether your getting mixed up in this business is a victory for Yale or Harvard, and I hope there is nothing to the story they are going to put a Harvard man in after a year or two and have the winner play Princeton.

* * * *

Anyhow, you will have no old-timers around to cramp your style and there will be so many young faces on the new board that it may be pretty disconcerting to investors at first. They have become accustomed to seeing a group of well-seasoned faces with just enough whiskers and double chins to give the impression of stability. It is going to seem strange to see a group photo of you and the new board and be sure that it is a photo of the board and not a snapshot of the Yale prom committee. Yours truly,

ELMER TWITCHELL.

Text Of Supreme Court Decision Limiting Tax Immunity Of States

Freedom From the Income Levy Is Declared a Prerogative Limited Strictly to Officers Performing Such Governmental Functions as Are Essential to Continued State Sovereignty

Text of the Supreme Court opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Stone follows on writs of certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Numbers 779, 780, 781, Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, vs. Philip L. Gerhardt, Billings Wilson and John J. Mulcahy:

MR. JUSTICE STONE.

The question for decision is whether the imposition of a Federal income tax for the calendar years 1932 and 1933 on salaries received by respondents, as employes of the Port of New York Authority, places an unconstitutional burden on the States of New York and New Jersey.

The Port Authority is a bi-State corporation, created by compact between New York and New Jersey, Laws of New York, 1921, c. 154; Laws of New Jersey, 1921, c. 151, approved by the Congress of the United States by joint resolution of August 23, 1921, c. 77, 42 Stat. 174. The compact authorized the Authority to acquire and operate "any terminal or transportation facility" within a specified district embracing the Port of New York and lying partially within each State. It directed the Authority to recommend a comprehensive plan for improving the port and facilitating its use, by the construction and operation of bridges, tunnels, terminals and other facilities.

Authority's Property Free of State Taxes.

The Port Authority collects tolls for the use of the bridges and tunnels, and derives income from the operation of the bus line and terminal building, but it has no stock and no stockholders, and is owned by no private persons or corporations. Its projects are all said to be operated in behalf of the two States and in the interests of the public, and none of its profits inure to the benefit of private persons. Its property and the bonds and other securities issued by it are exempt by statute from State taxation.

Statutes of New York and New Jersey relating to the various projects of the Port Authority declare that they are "in all respects for the benefit of the people of the two States, for the increase of their commerce and prosperity, and for the improvement of their health and living conditions, and the Port Authority shall be regarded as performing a governmental function in undertaking the said construction, maintenance and operation and in carrying out the provisions of law relating to the said (bridges and tunnels) and shall be required to pay no taxes or assessments upon any of the property acquired by it for the construction, operation and maintenance of such" bridges and tunnels.

The respondents, during the taxable years in question, were respectively a construction engineer and two assistant general managers, employed by the Authority at annual salaries ranging between $8,000 and $15,000. All took oaths of office, although neither the compact nor the related statutes appear to have created any office to which any of the respondents were appointed, or defined their duties or prescribed that they should take an oath. The several respondents having failed to return their respective salaries as income for the taxable years in question, the commissioner determined deficiencies against them.

The Board of Tax Appeals found that the Port Authority was engaged in the performance of a public function for the States of New York and New Jersey, and ruled that the compensation received by the Authority's employes was exempt from Federal income tax. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed without opinion on the authority of Brush vs. Commissioner, 85 F (2d) 32, aff'd. 300 U. S. 352; Commissioner vs. Ten Eyck, 76 F. (2d) 515, and New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, 299 U. S. 401. We granted certiorari because of the public importance of the question presented. —U.S.—

Constitution Provides No Specific Exemption.

The Constitution contains no express limitation on the power of either a State or the National Government to tax the other, or its instrumentalities. The doctrine that there is an implied limitation stems from McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, in which it was held that a State tax laid specifically upon the privilege of issuing bank notes, and in fact applicable alone to the notes of national banks, was invalid since it impeded the National Government in the exercise of its power to establish and maintain a bank, implied as an incident to the borrowing, taxing, war and other powers specifically granted to the National Government by Article I, section 8 of the Constitution. It was held that Congress, having power to establish a bank by laws which, when enacted under the Constitution, are supreme, also had power to protect the bank by striking down State action impeding its operations; and it was thought that the State tax in question was so inconsistent with Congress' constitutional action in establishing the bank as to compel the conclusion that Congress intended to forbid application of the tax to the Federal bank notes. Cf. Osborn vs. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 865-868.

That the taxing power of the Federal Government is nevertheless subject to an implied restriction when applied to State instrumentalities was first decided in Collector vs. Day, 11 Wall. 113, where the salary of a State officer, a probate judge, was held to be immune from Federal income tax. The question there presented to the court was not one of interference with a granted power in a field in which the Federal Government is supreme, but a limitation by implication upon the granted Federal power to tax. In recognizing that implication for the first time, the court was concerned with the continued existence of the States as governmental entities, and their preservation from destruction by the national taxing power. The immunity which it implied was sustained only because it was one deemed necessary to protect the States from destruction by the Federal taxation of those governmental functions which they were exercising when the Constitution was adopted and which were essential to their continued existence.

The Court pointed out that the States were in existence as such entities when the Constitution was adopted; that the Constitution guaranteed to them a republican form of government and undertook to protect them from invasion and domestic violence; that it presupposes the continued existence of the States and their continued performance, free of inhibition by the national taxing power of "the high and responsible duties assigned to them in the Constitution . . . And, more especially, those means and instrumentalities which are the creation of their sovereign and reserved rights, one of which is the establishment of the judicial department, and the appointment of officers to administer their laws.

Immunity of Day Case, However, Was Narrow.

"Without this power, the exercise of it," the Court declared, "we risk nothing in saying that no one of the States under the form of government guaranteed by the Constitution could long preserve its existence. A despotic government might. We have said that one of the reserved powers was that to establish a judicial department . . . All of the thirteen States were in the possession of this power, and had exercised it at the adoption of the Constitution; and it is not pretended that any grant of it to the general government is found in that instrument." 11 Wall. 125, 126.

There are cogent reasons why any constitutional restriction upon taxing power granted to Congress, so far as it can be properly raised by implication, should be narrowly limited. One, as was pointed out by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch vs. Maryland, supra, 435-436, and Osborn vs. Bank of the United States, supra, 465-466, is that the people of all the States have created the National Government and are represented in Congress. Through that representation they exercise the national taxing power. The very fact that when they are exercising it they are taxing themselves, serves to guard against its abuse through the possibility of resort to the usual processes of political action which provides a readier and more adaptable means than any which courts can afford, for securing accommodation of the competing demands for national revenue, on the one hand, and for reasonable scope for the independence of State action, on the other.

Another reason rests upon the fact that any allowance of a tax immunity for the protection of State sovereignty is at the expense of the sovereign power of the Nation to tax. Enlargement of the one involves diminution of the other. When enlargement proceeds beyond the necessity of protecting the State, the burden of the immunity is thrown upon the national Government with benefit only to a privileged class of taxpayers. See Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, 269 U. S. 114; cf. Thomson vs. Pacific Railroad, 9 Wall. 579, 588, 590.

With the steady expansion of the activity of State governments into new fields they have undertaken the performance of functions not known to the States when the Constitution was adopted, and have taken over the management of business enterprises once conducted exclusively by private individuals subject to the national taxing power. In a complex economic society tax burdens laid upon those who directly or indirectly have dealings with the States, tend, to some extent not capable of precise measurement, to be passed on economically and thus to burden the State government itself.

Unlimited Immunity Would End U. S. Power.

But if every Federal tax which is laid on some new form of State activity, or whose economic burden reaches in some measure the State or those who serve it, were to be set aside as an infringement of State sovereignty, it is evident that a restriction upon national power, devised only as a shield to protect the States from curtailment of the essential operations of government which they have exercised from the beginning, would become a ready means for striking down the taxing power of the Nation. See South Carolina vs. United States, 199 U. S. 437, 454-455.

In tacit recognition of the limitation which the very nature of our Federal system imposes on State immunity from taxation in order to avoid an ever-expanding encroachment upon the Federal taxing power, this Court has refused to enlarge the immunity substantially beyond those limits marked out in Collector v. Day, supra.

The immunity has been still more narrowly restricted in those cases where some part of the burden, of a tax, collected not from a State treasury but from individual taxpayers, is said to be passed on to the State. In these cases the function has been either held or assumed to be of such a character that its performance by the State is immune from direct Federal interference; yet the individuals who personally derived profit or compensation from their employment in carrying out the function were deemed to be subject to Federal income tax.

In a period marked by a constant expansion of Government activities and the steady multiplication of the complexities of taxing systems, it is perhaps too much to expect that the judicial pronouncements marking the boundaries of State immunity should present a completely logical pattern. But they disclose no purposeful departure from, and indeed definitely establish, two guiding principles of limitation for holding the tax immunity of State instrumentalities to its proper function. The one, dependent upon the nature of the function being performed by the State or, in its behalf, excludes from the immunity activities thought not to be essential to the preservation of State governments even though the tax be collected from the State treasury.

Levies on Businesses Of States Were Upheld.

The State itself was taxed for the privilege of carrying on the liquor business in South Carolina vs. United States, supra, and in Ohio vs. Helvering, supra; and a tax on the income of a State officer engaged in the management of a State-owned corporation operating a street railroad was sustained in Helvering vs. Powers, supra, because it was thought that the functions discouraged by these taxes were not indispensable to the maintenance of a State government. The other principle, exemplified by those cases where the tax laid upon individuals affects the State only as the burden is passed on to it by the taxpayer, forbids recognition of the immunity when the burden on the State is so speculative and uncertain that if allowed it would restrict the Federal taxing power without affecting any corresponding tangible protection to the State government, even though the function be thought important enough to demand immunity it is not necessarily protected from a tax which well may be substantially or entirely absorbed by private persons. Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra; Willcuts vs. Bunn, 282 U. S. 216.

With these controlling principles in mind we turn to their application in the circumstances of the present case. The challenged taxes laid under Section 22, Revenue act of 1932, c. 209, 47 State. 169, 178, are upon the net income of respondents, derived from their employment in common occupations not shown to be different in their methods or duties from those of similar employes in private industry.

The taxpayers enjoy the benefits and protection of the laws of the United States. They are under a duty to support its Government and are not beyond the reach of its taxing power. A nondiscriminatory tax laid on their net income, in common with that of all other members of the community, could by no reasonable probability be considered to preclude the perforance of the function which New York and New Jersey have undertaken, or to obstruct it more than like private enterprises are obstructed by our taxing system.

The fact that the expenses of the State government might be lessened if all those who deal with it were tax exempt was not thought to be an adequate basis for tax immunity in Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra, in Group No. 1 Oil Corp vs. Bass, 283 U. S. 279, in Burnet vs. Jergins Trust, 288 U. S. 508; or in Helvering vs. Mountain Producers Corp., No. 600, decided March 7, 1938. When immunity is claimed from a tax laid on private persons, it must clearly appear that the burden upon the State function is actual and substantial, not conjectural. Willcuts vs. Bunn, supra, 231.

Competitive Advantage Not Necessarily Given.

The basis upon which constitutional tax immunity of a State has been supported is the protection which it affords to the continued existence of the State. To attain that end it is not ordinarily necessary to confer on the State a competitive advantage over private persons in carrying on the operations of its government.

There is no such necessity here, and the resulting impairment of the Federal power to tax argues against the advantage. The State and National Governments must co-exist. Each must be supported by taxation of those who are citizens of both. The mere fact that the economic burden of such taxes may be passed on to a State government and thus increase to some extent, here wholly conjectural, the expense of its operation, infringes no constitutional immunity. Such burdens are but normal incidents of the organization within the same territory of two governments, each possessed of the taxing power.

During the present term we have held that the compensation of a State employe paid from the State treasury for his service in liquidating an insolvent corporation, where the State was reimbursed from the corporate assets, was subject to income tax McLoughlin vs. Commissioner, No. 287, decided February 28, 1938. But the court has never ruled expressly on the precise question whether the Constitution grants immunity from Federal income tax to the salaries of State employes performing, at the expense of the State, services of the character ordinarily carried on by private citizens.

The revenue act of 1917, considered in Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra, exempted the salaries of all State employes from income tax. But it was held in that case that neither the constitutional immunity nor the statutory exemption extended to independent contractors. In Brush vs. Commissioner, supra, the applicable Treasury regulation upon which the Government relied exempted from income tax the compensation of "State officers and employes" for "services rendered in connection with the exercise of an essential governmental function of the State."

The sole contention of the Government was that the maintenance of the New York City water supply system was not an essential governmental function of the State. The Government did not attack the regulation. No contention was made by it or considered or decided by the Court that the burden of the tax on the State was so indirect or conjectural as to be but an incident of the co-existence of the two governments, and, therefore, not within the constitutional immunity. If determination of that point was implicit in the decision it must be limited by what is now decided.

The pertinent provisions of the regulation applicable in the Brush case were continued in Regulations 77, Article 643, under the 1932 revenue act, until January 7, 1938, when they were amended to provide that "Compensation received for services rendered to a State is to be included in gross income unless the person receives such compensation from the State as an officer or employe thereof and such compensation is immune from taxation under the Constitution of the United States."

The applicable provisions of Section 116 of the 1932 act do not authorize the exclusion from gross income of the salaries of employes of a State or a State-owned corporation. If the regulation be deemed to embrace the employes of a State-owned corporation such as the Port Authority, it was unauthorized by the statute. But we think it plain that employes of the Port Authority are not employes of the State or a political subdivision thereof, within the meaning of the regulation as originally promulgated an additional reason why the regulation, even before the 1938 amendment, was ineffectual to exempt the salaries here involved.

The reasoning upon which the decision in Indian Motorcycle Co. vs. United States, supra, was rested is not controlling here. Taxation of the sale to a State, which was thought sufficient to support the immunity there, is not now involved. Whether the actual effect upon the performance of the State function differed from that of the present tax we do not now inquire. Compare Wheeler Lumber Bridge & Supply Co. vs. United States, 281 U. S. 572.

As was pointed out in Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra 524, there may be State agencies of such a character and so intimately associated with the performance of an indispensable function of State government that any taxation of it would threaten such interference with the functions of government itself as to be considered beyond the reach of the Federal taxing power. If the tax considered in Collector vs. Day, supra, upon the salary of an officer engaged in the performance of an indispensable function of the State which cannot be delegated to private individuals, may be regarded as such an instance, that is not the case presented here.

Expressing no opinion whether a Federal tax may be imposed upon the Port Authority itself with respect to its receipt of income or its other activities, we decide only that the present tax neither precludes nor threatens unreasonably to obstruct any function essential to the continued existence of the State government.

So much of the burden of the tax laid upon respondents' income as may reach the State is but a necessary incident to the coexistence within the same organized government of the two taxing sovereigns, and hence is a burden the existence of which the Constitution presupposes.

The immunity, if allowed, would impose to an inadmissible extent a restriction upon the taxing power which the Constitution has granted to the Federal Government.

Czechoslovakia Holds The Fort.

WHEN AUSTRIA disappeared last March, it appeared to most people only a question of time, and not much time at that, before Czechoslovakia would meet the same fate.

The only uncertainty appeared to be whether Germany would swallow the little republic whole, as a boa constrictor swallows a bird, or piecemeal, in the manner of a tiger eating his kill.

Surrounded on three sides by German territory; outnumbered almost five to one in population by the Third Reich; completely deadlocked, with her overseas trade moving by way of the German port of Hamburg; cut off from her allies, France and Russia, Czechoslovakia appeared to be in a helpless and hopeless position.

To make a very bad situation worse, the little Central European republic has within its borders some 3,000,000 German-speaking inhabitants over whom Hitler had thrown the mantle of Nazi protection.

* * * *

SOON AFTER HITLER'S triumphant entry into Vienna, Gen. Hermann Goering, the Fuehrer's right-hand man, promised the British government that Germany would use no military force against Czechoslovakia.

To the British leaders this was very reassuring and quite reasonable. It was reassuring because a direct German attack on Czechoslovakia might lead France to intervene on her ally's behalf and then, willy-nilly, Great Britain would find herself involved in a war not of her making. And it was reasonable because, as they saw it, Czechoslovakia was doomed anyway so that the Nazi government did not really have to use force to attain its objectives at Prague. A combination of Sudeten German agitation and economic pressure by the Third Reich would, as London saw it, do the trick. After all, why should Germany try to hasten the inevitable?

* * * *

AUSTRIA'S DEBACLE was followed, in due course, by the Anglo-Italian treaty, by the cementing of the military and naval ties between Great Britain and France and by the beginning of negotiations between France and Italy for a settlement of the outstanding differences between them. An Anglo-German deal, making possible a four-power Concert of Europe was anticipated as the next step. And all these developments, past and prospective, so British government spokesmen argued, would lead to a stabilizing of Europe's peace.

Of course that peace would not be without its casualties—Austria, Ethiopia, republican Spain, Czechoslovakia. But at any rate the scourge of a general war would be avoided.

* * * *

IT IS NOW apparent, however, that British statesmanship was guilty of several miscalculations. In the first place Messrs. Chamberlain, Halifax and their colleagues miscalculated the probable duration of the Spanish civil war.

When they signed the treaty with Italy that war, as they thought, was about over, with victory for Franco in sight. That war is not yet over and that being the case Mussolini remains under temptation to throw more men and arms into Spain. Then the present Italo-British treaty may become as much of a dead letter as did the gentleman's agreement of January, 1937.

In the second place, Great Britain miscalculated the strength of the Berlin-Rome axis after anschluss. Hitler's visit to Rome and the nature of his reception there indicated that neither the extension of the German frontier to the Brenner nor the Anglo-Italian treaty had led to a definite break between the dictators. They still find it useful to work together.

* * * *

BUT THE British also miscalculated with respect to Czechoslovakia.

To avoid giving Germany any pretext for intervention, the British urged the Prague government to make far-reaching concessions to Henlein and his Nazified Sudeten Germans in Czechoslovakia. This Premier Hodza agreed to do. Concessions have been made and others are in the making. But the Czechs are not willing to commit national suicide. They insist that the Sudeten Germans, fully guaranteed in their minority rights, must nevertheless remain within the framework of a sovereign and independent Czechoslovak state.

But it is doubtful whether any concessions by the Prague government to Henlein would more than momentarily satisfy Hitler. His heart bleeds for the Sudeten element only because they happen to be a very useful tool for the achievement of German hegemony in Central and Eastern Europe through the destruction of an independent Czechoslovakia. That is why Henlein's demands include measures destined to destroy that independence. Significantly, Hitler's heart does not bleed for the equally Teutonic inhabitants of Southern Tyrol. At Rome he did not hesitate to sacrifice the Tyrolese out of friendship for Mussolini.

* * * *

THE EXTENT of British miscalculations on the Czechoslovak problem became apparent last week. Germany then indicated that it was not willing to sit by and wait for the Czechoslovak apple to fall into her lap; that, on the contrary it might, if necessary, seek to bring it down by violently shaking the tree.

A campaign of extreme vituperation against the Prague government was then let loose in the Nazi press; ominous warnings were issued and there was a concentration of German troops along the Czechoslovak border.

In other words, there was a very real possibility that Hitler might, through a lightning stroke, try to overwhelm Czechoslovakia. The Douhet theory of sudden attack and the Ludendorff theory of totalitarian war apparently have gained many advocates in the Third Reich, not least because the slow wearing down of Czechoslovak resistance cannot any longer be taken for granted and because time may fight against Germany as well as for it.

No wonder, then, that last week Europe again teetered on the edge of war. But once more war was averted. The magnificent calmness and courage displayed by the Czechs, the fact that they mobilized no less than 500,000 men, the clear warning by France that she would go to Czechoslovakia's aid, and last but not least, Britain's strong pressure on Berlin turned the tide for peace.

If Hitler's gestures were bluff, it is significant that it was not a great power but a small one that successfully called this bluff. If, on the other hand, he really intended to go through with his intended invasion of Czechoslovakia, and this thesis cannot be reflected out of hand, the closing of the ranks of the democracies obviously scared him off. Germany is unprepared for a general war. So Europe has another breathing spell. But on this, as on previous occasions, it remains a breathing spell between crises.

Robert Taylor Again Proves Tough Hombre

Portrays Role of Fighter and Really Fights in 'The Crowd Roars.'

By Frederick G. Othman,
United Press Hollywood Correspondent.

Hollywood, May 23.—Robert Taylor went about proving today that he's as tough a plug-ugly as the next actor, whenever the part calls for it.

Wearing nothing but black satin shorts and a pair of leather gloves, Taylor is a prizefighter in his current picture. His hair is sweaty from glycerine, his face is flecked with blood, his cheeks are pushed out of shape by his tooth-protector, and he is one of the meanest looking gladiators we ever saw in the ring.

His chest is hairy, his footwork perfect, and he is proving beyond doubt that he can take a punch and land one, too. Movie boxers are supposed not to hit each other hard, but Taylor and his pals really are trading blows. You can hear 'em land and see the red spots they leave, and if you still believe those "pretty boy" stories about Taylor, it's time you changed your mind.

Kills Heavyweight.

The picture is called "The Crowd Roars." It's no nicey-nice comedy. Taylor is a young prizefighter who kills the ex-heavyweight champion in the ring. That turns him into a bum. He can get work nowhere. He finally has to return to the ring and almost goes slaphappy, until finally he falls in love and thereby solves his problems. For support he's got Frank Morgan, Edward Arnold, Lionel Stander, William Gargan and Maureen O'Sullivan.

Gargan, incidentally, plays the broken-down champ and therein hangs a story. When he signed for the part, he was told he had to be in perfect shape.

"So I went to the gymnasium," he said. "I took Turkish baths. I rode stationary bicycles. I dieted and in two weeks I'd lost 19½ pounds. I was in the pink. I never had been so healthy.

"And then they told me what my part was. I was supposed to be the broken-down former champ, with the beginnings of a paunch, muscles all shot, and all the rest. It was a shock. I've got to hand it to the makeup man for making me look like a wreck."

Madison Square in Hollywood.

Scene before the camera of director Dick Thorpe showed the squared circle and Madison Square Garden. In the ring were Taylor and Gargan battling each other in the rounds before the death scene. Lights glared from above. Newspaper photographers' flash bulbs boomed from the ring-side. Telegraph keys clattered.

The crowd roared—and that perhaps is the most interesting part of this dispatch. MGM had 700 extras on one of its biggest sound stages.

They were grouped in tiers of seats in front of the camera, so that the stadium will look jammed in the picture. These extras had perhaps the easiest jobs Hollywood ever offered. They were paid $7.50 per day each, just for sitting there, watching Taylor box.

They even had free food and drink. For purposes of reality, the candy butchers passed among them, with peanuts and pop and whatnot and they purchased what they wanted—with stage money.

One Complaint.

They did have one serious complaint. Movie fight arenas are supposed always to be blue with cigarette smoke. The studio provided the smoke with the usual bee smokers, which are bellows arrangements with smoldering resin inside. The extras stood it for a few hours, then appointed a committee to complain that the smoke hurt their throats.

The studio fixed that by handing each of them three cigarettes and instructing them to smoke—on the house.

"And would you know," complained the prop man, "that most of 'em tried to save their cigarettes for later?

Studio Keeps 27 Stars Busy Before Camera

In keeping with the uptrend of production activity in Hollywood, Twentieth Century-Fox studios will have 27 ranking stars before the cameras by next week.

Tyrone Power, Loretta Young and Annabella will be featured in the studio's next $2,000,000 dramatic spectacle, "Suez," which Allan Dwan will direct. They leave soon for an Arizona location, where scenes of the famed canal's construction will be filmed.

Gladys George has been signed for a leading role in "Ellis Island," scheduled to go before the cameras May 9. Don Ameche and Arleen Whelan will be with her in the story built around New York's famous immigration station, and Alfred Werker will handle the direction.

Rolling before the cameras now is Sonja Henje's starring vehicle, "My Lucky Star." Richard Greene, English discovery, who scored in "Four Men and a Prayer," is playing opposite her. Cesar Romero plays another comedy role, as do Joan Davis, recently voiced America's No. 1 comedienne, and Buddy Ebsen.

With Shirley Temple in her latest Twentieth Century-Fox starring film, "Lucky Penny," are Charles Farrell, Bill "Bojangles" Robinson and a new comic love team, Joan Davis and Bert Lahr.

Besides Loretta Young, who goes into "Suez," three other principals of "Three Blind Mice," which finished this week, will immediately go into other productions. Marjorie Weaver gets her biggest break in the feminine lead opposite Warner Baxter in "I'll Give a Million," which also includes Peter Lorre and Jean Hersholt. Stuart Erwin and Pauline Moore will portray the leading roles in Passport Husband," which Director James Tinling sends before the cameras next week.

Janes Withers' latest film, "Hello, Hollywood," is nearing completion with Gloria Stuart and Henry Wilcoxon in supporting roles. Completing the imposing list of star-studded productions is "Always Goodbye," in which Sidney Lanfield is directing Barbara Stanwyck, Herbert Marshall, Ian Hunter and Cesar Romero.

John Golden Takes Census of Patrons And Culls Much Valuable Information

Six Months Survey Gives Index to Play Selection and Insight Into Touring Value; Variety Celebrates an Event; New Bill at RKO-Keith's Tomorrow; a Verbal Road Map; Subscription Books at National.

BELL.

JOHN GOLDEN announces the termination of the New York run of Gertrude Lawrence in Rachel Crother's play of "Susan and God," at the Plymouth Theater, on Saturday night, June 4, after nine consecutive months of capacity business on Broadway. This steady capacity business would warrant an indefinite continuance of the run of the piece, but Mr. Golden, it seems, had promised Miss Lawrence a summer vacation in her native England and has no intention of going back on his word.

Miss Lawrence will sail immediately after the last performance and will return to this country in time to reopen the play in San Francisco in August.

In connection with the run of "Susan and God," Mr. Golden has made an interesting and valuable experiment. Convinced that after the first three months on Brodway any hit play may rely on out-of-town visitors to sustain its box-office prosperity, six months ago he inaugurated an accurate checkup on "foreign" patronage at the Plymouth and employed a staff of statisticians to tabulate the results of a painstaking and accurate survey.

These census figures are authoritative enough to serve as a basis of play selection. The figures over all the different months since the Christmas holidays vary so slightly that a break-down of one month serves to show the steady percentage of out-of-town visitors to the theater. During the month of April, for example, in a total attendance of 24,891 there were 4,471 "guests" of the city from other places at the play. Forty-eight States were represented by 4,036 persons, or 16.5 per cent, while 375 patrons, or 1.5 per cent of the attendance, came from 23 foreign countries. The guest attendance was 18 per cent of the total for the month. These figures have varied only a fraction of 1 per cent from month to month.

Contrary to popular supposition, Saturday is not the best day of the week in the theater in New York, but the worst.

The concrete results of all this, according to Mr. Golden, are that as a producer he must seek plays for long runs in the metropolis that have wide appeal in theme and treatment and not only an urban appeal; that a long run, aided by out-of-town attendance, presages touring value for a production.

Mr. Golden, one of the shrewdest of the theater's enterpreneurs, considers these figures of such value that he has had them compiled for early publication in book form. "I feel that the investment in this census was one of the best I ever made in the theater," he says, "and its value will become more evident as we put into practice the lessons we learned from it."

If he isn't careful, the first thing he knows Mr. Golden will be dubbed the Babson of the buskin!

It will be recalled that "Susan and God" was attended by a note of tragedy upon the night of its first appearance on any stage in the National Theater last September 28. It was on that night, only a few hours after the fall of the final curtain, that Osgood Perkins, cast opposite Miss Lawrence, was striken with a fatal heart attack in his hotel apartment. The play was suspended for one night and then proceeded throughout the remainder of the week with Paul McGrath elevated to the Perkins role. There was much discussion among Mr. Golden and his associates as to the advisability of supplanting Mr. McGrath with a "name" actor to take Mr. Perkins' place, but to the credit of all concerned that never was done. Mr. McGrath proved wholly worthy of the trust that was placed in him when he was continued in the part.

The Variety Club luncheon, held in the Willard Hotel yesterday at 1 o'clock, was one of the most felicitious and most notable in the annals of the showmen's organization. With Frederick William Wile as the interesting and witty "king for the day," the occasion was largely dedicated to the Fourth Estate. The principal talk was made by Earle Godwin, president of the White House Correspondents Association, who gave an intimate "behind the scenes" description of a White House press conference, and was followed, briefly, by George R. Holmes, president of the Gridiron Club; Harold Brayman, president of the National Press Club; Erwin D. Crannam, president of the Overseas Writers, and Harlan Miller, Washington Post columnist. The prelude and postlude to Mr. Wile's splendid program were intoned by A. Julian Brylawski, chief barker of Variety.

Following the luncheon, Rudolph Berger, chairman of the club's welfare committee, presented a new ambulance to Emergency Hospital, as an item in Variety's schedule of charitable enterprises, concerning which something will be found in other columns of today's issue of The Post.

Deanna Durbin will take her last high note in "Mad About Music" at RKO-Keith's tonight, when almost a month's run of the picture will come to an end. With Herbert Marshall costarred with the youthful prima donna, "Mad About Music" has taken its place among the most delightful exhibits of the spring season in Washington. Beginning tomorrow, the chief feature of the bill will be "Vivacious Lady," in which Ginger Rogers and James Stewart have the stellar roles. The story of this sprightly subject concerns the adventures and misadventures of a young college professor and his night-club bride. Mr. Stewart is a shy, young botany professor who marries the dashing star of the night spots and then is afraid to break the news to his puritanical father, who is president of the college. You can go on from there. James Ellison, Charles Coburn, Beulah Bondi and Phyllis Kennedy are important in the supporting cast. A new "March of Time" also breaks out with this program, "Racketeers vs. Housewives," "England's Bankrupt Peers" and "Friend of the People" being the three timely topics of which it treats.

The Cross Roads Theater, down at Baileys Cross Roads, in Virginia, opened its summer season last night with Mark Reed's comedy, "Petticoat Fever." So many anxious inquirers have phoned and written in for information as to how to reach this popular amusement place that a verbal road map may not be out of order. Here it is.

Cross the Fourteenth Street Bridge and continue on the Alexandria highway to the first traffic light; turn right and drive 7 miles to Baileys Cross Roads; turn left and drive two blocks to the theater.

Now all you have to do is try and find it.

The public sale of subscription tickets for the 1938-39 series of six plays to be presented in the National Theater by the Theater Guild and the American Theater Society of Washington is now in full swing, the renewal period for old subscribers having expired. Since April 1, subscriptions have more than doubled the number booked during the same period last year, when the subscripiton list reached a total of 5,519. It is expected that by early autumn this enrollment will have been doubled. The outlook for sterling plays under the subscription plan at the present time is bright. Already assured are the Lunts in "The Sea Gull," John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men," Thornton Wilder's "Our Town," the Pulitzer Prize winner of 1938; the Mercury Theater's "The Five Kings," the Shakespeare cycle of the Henrys and the Richards—which, it is rumored, may require two nights for complete presentation—and two new plays by the Theater Guild's newly organized Acting Company, both directed by Worthington Miner. Location charts now are open in the office of the American Theater Society in the National Theater.

In Hollywood With Hedda Hopper

HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., May 23.—Don't struggle—just allow yourself to be "Kidnaped" for an hour and a half. You'll have an emotional thrill you don't often get. So many different elements went into the making of that picture, and they blended together like rare old wine.

Each time I see Freddie Bartholomew I smile to myself over the thought of his being replaced by anybody else. You've read the threatening sentence many times: "If so-and-so won't play this part we'll get somebody better." In Freddie's case, and in most of the others, there is no one better. Too bad he ever has to grow up. With pictures like this, Warner Baxter needn't worry about his future.

What a star they've found in that little Whalen girl, and she's not a blonde. There is hard work ahead for her, but she has quality.

A word about Al Werker, who directed. Son of a fine musician, he started as property boy for Mary Pickford. Even in those days they tried to find out what time he got to the studio. No one else came early enough to see him arrive. Those tried and true directors with years of experience are still turning out our greatest successes.

When Janet Gaynor and Tyrone Power read that their romance had ended, they were holding hands over a cup of coffee.

The alleged feud between Dorothy Lamour and Henry Hathaway is slightly exaggerated, too. She's giving a performance she didn't think was in her. True, to get the effect he wanted, Hathaway has been a little rough. But when he got it, he rushed to her and said, "Sorry I was brutal, but had to do it, honey."

Did you know that Nelson Eddy was a wood carver? Has been going for ages to a little man in Beverly, who has no idea who Nelson is. In showing some of his work, he said, "Pretty good, eh? This was done by a fellow who sings for them thar pictures."

Japanese Spur Tired Soldiers With Oxygen

Energy Tablets and X-Rays Also Help Weary Fighting Men.

By Elmer W. Peterson,
By the Associated Press.

With the Japanese Army in Central China, May 23.—The Japanese soldier swallows "energy tablets" when unduly weakened by prolonged fighting, lack of sleep or enervating heat.

If necessary, he inhales oxygen provided in small tubes and released into a rubber-silk bag.

This scientific attention to human energy is one of the ultra-modern touches disclosed in a first-hand inspection of the Japanese army in the field.

X-ray Near Front Lines.

(The Japanese army in Central China is seeking to close its lines about an estimated 200,000 Chinese, a remnant of the 800,000 it thought cornered in last week's successful conquest of Suchow, and to drive west along the Lunghai Railway corridor for an offensive against Hankow, one of China's temporary capitals.)

The writer saw mobile X-ray equipment driven up directly behind the front lines as an aid to field surgery.

A soldier suffering from an abdominal wound was lifted onto a table and a gasoline engine speeded up to provide current for the equipment.

Mobile Hospital.

In a few minutes the surgeons completed their examination and, with fighting only a few miles away and war planes droning, the patient was carried to a mobile field operating unit.

The unit was made up of three trucks joined by runways and tent-like canopies.

"We cannot afford to lose men the way the Chinese can," a Japanese field surgeon said.

Research at Battlefield.

The organization of a scientifis army was disclosed in other ways:

In the use of field wireless by land units for reporting detailed movements and by airplanes for hourly reports.

In the one-two-three precision with which engineers built a pontoon bridge.

In a large "horse hospital" where hundreds of artillery and cavalry horses were being treated and operated upon and where research work was progressing almost on the battlefield.

Upward of 50,000 letters daily for men in the front lines are being handled at field headquarters.

Meat Brought 400 Miles.

This writer drank beer bottled in Japan, ate fresh meat brought 400 miles from Shanghai the same day and used toothpicks made in Japan.

The "energy tablets," however, attracted the most interest. I chewed one and found it had a faint flavor of peppermint.

I inhaled some oxygen and found myself a bit giddy, rather than strong.

ized the War Department to enter into contracts totaling $10,000,000 for the construction of equipment during the coming fiscal year.

Explaining that the additional defenses would be installed in nine States on both the East and West coasts, on the Gulf of Mexico and in the Panama Canal Zone and Hawaii, Secretary Woodring pointed out the funds would flow into nearly every major industry in the country.

Calling attention to the recent Air Corps maneuvers around New York City, Woodring asserted it was clearly shown during the war games that "aviation cannot fight aviation," particularly at night.

Emphasis, he indicated, should be laid on the fact that bombers attacking two aircraft factories and a railroad junction at Farmingdale, Long Island, had "demolished" their objectives during a "black-out" despite antiaircraft defense.

Pursuit planes, in the sham night attack, were unable to get into the air in time to forestall the attacking bombers.

Technical Needs Stressed.

The importance of beginning the expansion of antiaircraft and coast defenses at once, Woodring said, lies in the fact that much of the material is of a highly technical nature and cannot be built overnight. He referred to "such scientific instruments as direction-finders, height indicators and locators."

Seacoast defenses need considerable additions before they can constitute an adequate guarantee against the landing of a foreign foe, he added.

A Senate measure, now being considered by a conference committee, carries $16,000,000 for shore defenses. The War Department program calls for $55,000,000 for this purpose.

Would Free Warships.

One of the primary purposes of coast defenses, War Department officials assert, is to permit the Navy to get to sea.

"If foreign ships were lying off the coast they could 'pick off' American vessels as they emerged in single file from the harbors of the country," they claim.

Czechs and Nazis Tell Britain They 'Prefer Parleys to War'

Czech

tion contests in Czechoslovakia yesterday can be maintained, Chamberlain was understood determined to press with every ounce of effort for a lasting settlement of differences between Hitler and his neighbors.

It was suggested an almost-forgotten arbitration treaty between Germany and Czechoslovakia might be the vehicle for an agreement that would give Germany a peaceful guardianship over blood brothers across the frontier and still save the Czechoslovak state for those who want it.

London Speeds Arming.

But Britain recognized there still was ample powder for explosions in the remaining Czechoslovak elections—next Sunday and June 12.

In the midst of the most forceful diplomatic moves for peace in a generation, hundreds of planes flew over London and other British cities as a prelude to tomorrow's Empire Day observances.

Sir Kingsley Wood, new air minister, who was given the task of speeding up lagging air rearmament, had an audience with King George VI. On Wednesday he will face a bitter House of Commons debate on the air program.

Hitler Assures Britain.

Berlin, May 23 (U.P.).—Fuehrer Hitler has assured Great Britain through one of his closest associates who hurried to London incognito that Germany has "not the slightest intention" of marching troops into Czechoslovakia, it was revealed tonight.

The disclosure coincided with newspaper reports in London that Capt. Fritz Wiedmann, Hitler's personal adjutant, who visited Washington last November, had been in the British capital over the week-end on a secret mission. He carried full diplomatic credentials.

Hitler's messenger conferred with the German Ambassador, Herbert von Dircksen, immediately upon his arrival in London and talked with several leading British statesmen.

He was understood to have expressed German hope that Czechoslovakia will respect the results of the municipal elections there and "act accordingly."

Violations Claimed.

On the side of tension were reports carried by the semiofficial German news agency of three alleged "violations" of the frontier by Czech troops.

A third "violation" of the frontier by Czech soldiers along the 1,315-mile German border stretch occurred today at Ulrichsburg and Hohenfurth, north of Linz in Austria, the semiofficial German news agency, Deutches Nachrichten Bureau, asserted.

The agency said Czech soldiers spread straw on the international bridges at Ulrichsburg and Hohenfurth, soaked the straw with gasoline and prepared to ignite it.

The D. N. B. said German frontier guards found the Czech soldiers on German soil but that the Czechs were forced to retreat to their own territory before they had a chance to ignite the bridges.

The German agency reported a Czech military airplane flew over the frontier near Baerenstein, cruised over the city and back into Czechoslovakia where it crashed near Pressnitz and burst into flames.

Situation "Calmed."

Prague, May 23 (U.P.).—Premier Milan Hodza and Konrad Henlein, militant German minority leader, announced tonight after a long conference they had been able to "clarify and calm" the Nazi-Czechoslovak crisis.

INSERT A—CZECH—P 1, COL 1

[The Prague correspondent of the London News Chronicle reported today, the United Press said, that German troops were being withdrawn from the Czechoslovakian frontier to a position 25 miles distant.—Editor's Note.]

The "Czechoslovak Hitler," rushing back from Vienna for the meeting, was closeted with the premier for 3 hours and 45 minutes in a discussion to determine whether a basis exists for peaceful settlement of the German minority's autonomy demands.

"The conversation served to clarify and calm the political situation," a Sudeten communique said.

Hodza will follow up his talk with Henlein by conferring soon with leaders of the Polish and Hungarian minorities.

Henlein and Hodza met at 6 p. m. for their first conference in the long-brewing crisis.

The government announced that in the future no civilian gymnastic organizations—many of them are minority groups—will be permitted to serve at guard duty.

Without a Sudeten agreement to negotiate on the Czechoslovak government's proposed minority statute, granting some of Henlein's sweeping demands, Britain and France fear that a peaceful solution of the German-Czech crisis is almost impossible.

Italy an "Observer."

Rome, May 23 (A.P.).—An official of the Italian Ministry of Popular Culture declared today Italy was only an observer of the waning Czechoslovak crisis since events in Czechoslovakia affected "only that country and Germany."

Kingston, Jamaica, May 23 (U.P.).—Two British cruisers tonight were reported racing here to aid the government to cope with growing strike disorders after a day of violence. Several thousand strikers and sympathizers staged riotous demonstrations.

a cessation of all sales of German war materials to China.

It was taken for granted recall of the German advisers by Hitler followed representations in Berlin by the Japanese ambassador there who demanded the German action under terms of the German-Japanese-Italian pact.

Other developments:

The Japanese army spokesman in Shanghai admitted Lanfeng was in Chinese hands but said Japanese forces were bombarding it on three sides.

"Lanfeng is the gateway to the western Lunghai line," he said, "and once we have consolidated our positions there it will be easy to encircle Kweiteh, Kaifeng and other Lunghai stations to the westward.

"One of our flying columns from the south, which cut the Lunghai 13 miles west of Lanfeng on Sunday, has cut off the retreat of 100,000 Chinese to the northwest of that city.

"The Chinese are counter-attacking on the Chengwo, Kinsiang and Kweiteh fronts but our forces are holding everywhere.

"To the southward our detachments are pursuing those Chinese regiments which escaped our encircling movement west of the Tientsin-Pukow railway."

Reports of British pressure against the Japanese continued here. It was said Britain had decided to use warships to force reopening of the lower Yangtse river to British commerce.

Japanese press dispatches from Suchow said Japanese columns driving westward along the Lunghai railway were expected to capture Kaifeng within 48 hours. It was admitted three or four Chinese divisions had broken through the Japanese cordon around Suchow and joined the big Chinese army—estimated at 400,000—defending Kaifeng.

Keweiteh, China, May 23 (A.P.).—A half-dozen American missionaries came through a Japanese air raid without a scratch today and expressed determination to remain at their posts.

They were Miss Olive Riddell, of Dumbarton, Va.; the Rev. and Mrs. Philip White and their two children, of Hertford, N. C., and the Rev. H. Konsterlie, a Lutheran of St. Paul, Minn.

in a clash in which he and 11 followers fought federal troops near Lazunita, in the southeastern part of the state, the defense ministry announced today.

The ministry said the slain man headed a rebel band of 150 men, the group coming to battle with the Thirty-fifth Cavalry Regiment.

Dispatches from the revolt front late today said the situation rapidly was becoming normal, with federal troops controlling most points of strategic importance. It was stated they were not meeting resistance in the mountain villages through which they marched in seeking to rout Cedillistas who took to the hills.

Peso Falls Sharply.

The country's internal difficulties caused the peso to dip sharply in trading in the capital, hitting 4.90 to the dollar in street sales after closing of the banks where quotations had ranged from 4.50 to 4.75.

The Oil Workers Union offered to aid federal troops in protecting oil fields against the rebels.

Earlier the defense ministry had politely refused to accept volunteers from the Socialist Youth Organization.

Delayed messages reaching the capital today disclosed federal troops under Gen. Jose Beltran Moreno had captured Las Palomas yesterday without firing a shot.

Ranch Workers Flee.

About 100 unarmed workers on the ranch fled in trucks and on horses and no effort was made to pursue them. Cedillo's fighting forces had fled ahead of the government attack.

There was an unconfirmed report the vast ranch would be distributed immediately among agrarians.

Federal cavalry pursued small rebel bands in several regions, while heavy infantry forces moved up over the Laredo highway running through Tamaz, Unchale and Valles and along the Tampico-Potosi Railway in an effort to block Cedillo's troop movements eastward.

Mexico-bound tourists are being advised by the American consul at the border city of Nuevo Laredo to delay their trip for a few days "because of conflicting rumors" regarding movements against President Cardenas at San Luis Potosi, the State Department said yesterday.

Consul Romeyn Wormuth, of New York, is taking this action as a result of a suggestion from American Consul General James B. Stewart at Mexico City, the department said.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'How to Enter Into Social Activities in Washington?' Asks Well-Educated Woman in Thirties.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: How can I enter into social activities in Washington? I am in my early thirties, a university graduate, with excellent cultural and social background and of good family. I left a pleasant circle of friends to come here and have made very pleasant friendships here. The trouble is that while my friends at home were my own age or younger, my only contacts here are with persons in their sixties—my parents' set, so far as age is concerned.

* * * *

The department in which I work is staffed solely with women, all much older than I. The members of their families whom I have met are of their age. The group with which I come in contact at church are middle-aged. I attend night school, but the class is composed entirely of women.

* * * *

Probably there are other young women in my position here who would appreciate—even as I—some information on how to gain entrance into a circle of kindred spirits of contemporary age who lead a normal social life. At home my circle of friends was constantly decimated by marriage, but I was able to make up the difference with friends met in a business way. My present work offers no contact with the general public. The ladies with whom I work really are lovely but I think it is only natural that I should want to go places and do things with persons my own age. For example, I like to swim, ride horseback, bicycle, dance, etc., but I cannot do these things alone, nor with the ladies at church and office. What do you suggest? MIDDLE WESTENER.

* * * *

Possible Avenues.

DEAR M. W.: The Washington League of Women Shoppers, of which Mrs. Charles Wood Collier is executive secretary; the local branch of the Business and Professional Women's Club, of which Miss Nina Kinsella is president; and the American Association of University Women, with headquarters at 1634 Eye street northwest, all offer interesting possibilities for making friendships with persons approximately your own age.

* * * *

The first-named organization, to which several women of great distinction belong, is concerned with the social betterment of working women, and has been described to me as including in its membership some of the most attractive and "live wire" of Washington's younger authors, humanitarians, socialites and such-like, all united in pleasant fellowship in a common cause. The Business and Professional Women's Club, of course, is made up of business and professional women, many in their thirties, like yourself, and all of them vitally interested in such aspects of community and world affairs as would affect their welfare as individuals and as a group. This past year, for instance, their group inquiry had to do with "Our Town's Business."

* * * *

Membership in the A. A. U. W. gives a pleasant background for entertaining and for meeting women of similar cultural and educational advantages, many of whom, naturally, would fall into your age classification. In addition to these, I would suggest your own State society, which undoubtedly offers a social program during the winter season. Get acquainted with its officers and frankly declare your hesitancy to come to social affairs unattended; it may be found possible to include you in an odd-numbered, happily informal group. You might arrange in advance for some pleasant letters of introduction from influential persons "back home."

* * * *

Another thought is the local branch of the Oxford Group, if you are religiously or spiritually inclined, and could lend yourself sincerely to non-denominational Christian effort on behalf of your fellowman. You may contact the group by telephoning EMerson 6520. Some of the finest work it does is alleviating loneliness, primarily through supplying members with so much work of a humanitarian kind to do that they have no time to be lonely, and secondly, through bringing high-type young persons into association with their own kind. I have lunched and dined with members of the group, and all those I have met have been young, personable, intelligent, cordially companionable and thoroughly conversant with society in its larger, as well as in its more limited, sense. (However, in giving me permission to say this much about the group, its director begs me expressly to say that "It is not a club for the lonely." The point is well taken. It is an organization of extremely busy, sincere and unselfish workers. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Dresses Suggested By Robin Hood Film

Dart Frock Is Smartest of Styling Adaptations.

Because the costumes in the motion picture "Robin Hood" offered such splendid possibilities for modern adaptation, Orry Kelly, designer for Warner Brothers, has created a number of interesting daytime dresses, using the costumes of both the men and women screen players as inspiration. One two-piece affair in black and white or in other effective color combinations has scalloped sleeves and tunic to simulate the ragged styling of this period. Another in beige and green has square scallops, and lacings of bright green. The dart dress is especially smart; a simple one-piece affair in pastel tints with a huge white dart extending from neckline to hem as the medium of decoration. All of these interpretations are available at a local store.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, May 23.

FATHER'S DAY IS 1-cumen in, like summer, and will be actually in on June 9, so it behooves us to give our annual thought to dad, pop, fawtha, or just "the old man" in the terms of irreverent youth. All right, now we have given him his thought. Now let us turn to mere men, and the ever-important matter of their clothes, which is always the Armageddon of Jim Thurber's classic "War Between Men and Women."

ALICE HUGHES

The other day I wanted to get a yarn on best-dressed men, which is hardly a blinding stroke of original genius, but always good for something, however vague. Moreover, I didn't want a piece from the sniffish attitude of the custom tailors to Park avenue or the famed Brooks Brothers. I wanted the livelier crowd, and so I went to Dave Levy, of Nat Lewis, haberdasher to the great of Broadway. Dave says that the two best-dressed groups of this stratum in town are sports writers and band leaders. Well, now!

Damon Runyon, columnist and fictioneer, is called tops by Dave, Damon sets styles for his crowd, such as the short-sleeved wool shirts he wears without a coat. Of the stick-wavers, Fred Waring is practically at the peak, and Jack Benny is called best-dresser among the air idols.

Nat Lewis' newest nifty for summer is flannel or gabardine slacks, with matching sleeveless coat-sweater. Great when Broadway wanders out of town and gets fresh-air poisoning, common plague here! Dave says the two groups named must keep better dressed than the average college lad or aimless playboy, for they are always in the limelight, night and day. So here is your Poppa's Day Tip direct from the arbiter elegantiarum of the Broadway Beau Brummel Bell!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Our Eleanor Shaler is confused and at bay, which is girl-bites-dog news to us who have known her since when. We've watched her as a charming actress from the "Garrick Gaeties" on, and as an excellent advertising woman later. Eleanor is one of the most capable girls I know. Yet now she's thrown—and by a 2-month-old baby. I just met her coming out of a book shop, arms filled with tomes in infant culture. Moreover, she's happily married to a gentleman farmer, lives on acres just outside of Philadelphia and has a set of frozen-society hostesses who sent her elegant wedding presents, but haven't yet called. All in all, this lovely and able woman, tops in everything she tried before, is now having hard times with motherhood and the social racket. My money on Eleanor to lick that spot, too!

YOUR FIGURE MADAME!

Reducing Expert Quotes Her Testimonials to Raise Confidence.

By Ida Jean Kain.

PROMISES TO A reducer have the ring of campaign speeches to a constituent. The confirmed overweight takes it all in wistfully but does not really expect the pounds and inches to disappear as guaranteed. So, like the veteran campaigner, I'm going to refer to my record and cite case histories to build up your confidence—in yourself.

Whenever someone else accomplishes the incredible, then we know we can do it, too. Here is a letter than will make you believe those miracles promised of exercise:

"Although I have not followed your regime closely, I was induced to follow the exercises given in the daily articles and to eat more sparingly of sweets and pastries. I want you to know how much better I feel. While I have lost only 10 pounds, I have taken off 1 inch over the bust, 3 inches at the waistline, and 3 inches at the hips. The reason I am writing is so you can tell others what persistent exercise will do for the figure. I found out from actual experience!"

One Loses 100 Pounds.

That type of letter will encourage those of you who want to change

A fast-working reducer for this your measurements without any great loss of weight. To those with considerable overweight, another case history: A few weeks ago a reducer wrote of the triumphant conclusion of a two-year program carefully supervised by her doctor. She had lost 100 pounds, wears a size 14 dress and is in better health than she ever has been before.

No matter how hopeless it may seem to you, there is nothing you cannot do for your figure if you just believe that you can—and will go ahead and do it. Once you get the habit of exercise it ceases to be a bore. You will really enjoy your workouts. You will wonder why you did not start sooner. A more visible return for your effort, however, will be the loss in inches. You can take 1½ inches off the hipline in a month, provided you exercise every single day.

POSITION: Standing with the body stretched tall, hands down at sides, and feet planted firmly.

MOVEMENT: Swinging the trunk downward almost parallel with the floor, fling the arms back, and kick the right foot backward as high as possible. The kick is from the hip, and when you first begin the exercise you may need to support yourself with one hand on a chair or table. You will learn to balance yourself and kick freely in a vigorous upward swing of the leg. Try not to bend the knee. Kick with alternate legs and take time for the upward stretch while recovering balance and breath. This is a strenuous exercise and until you have become accustomed to it should be repeated only five or six times. After ten days, 50 kicks will not hurt you. Gradually increase to 100 times.

Electrical Responses.

Yesterday we pointed out that the body is in many respects an electrical field. We can measure changes in potential in a muscle when it contracts. And every time the heart beats there is a shift of potential from one side of the body to the other, and which can be measured with a sufficiently delicate galvonometer and used to study the action of the heart.

Even thought may be accompanied by changes of the same kind, and the functions of the brain have been studied by an electric instrument known as the encephalograph.

These studies and others have laid the foundation for the electro-dynamic theory of life proposed by Northrup and Burr. Connected up with the newer developments in physics, it suggests that life is a manifestation of energy in which electric currents play a great part.

The rhythms of life are easily measured on the electrical oscellograph. Changes occur at different times in a woman's life cycle, especially during pregnancy.

The air is a conductor of electricity, and the body responds to ionic changes in the air and the effects of climate. Some people are benefited when exposed to sea air which is more charged with negative ions.

In the Alps there is a thing known as the "Foehn sickness" which resembles mountain sickness. It is due to a warm, dry wind descending into the Alpine valleys in the late winter and early spring, carrying down large numbers of atmospheric ions and increasing the ionic content of the lower stratas.

Changed feelings which we have in the spring, winter and summer may be due to changes in the atmospheric ions that surround us.

Weather changes symptoms, and this may be due to electricity. Everyone must have experienced the sense of tension just before an electrical storm. The fellow with the rheumatism can tell when it is going to rain because his sore joints tune up. So can the fellow with the bullet in him somewhere. These feelings are rare, but have never been explained. Nor has the undoubted fact that dampness will bring on an attack of gout or arthritis. But they may very well be due to changes in the electrical field around us.

Problem of 'Man's World' Not a Worry in Turkey

Business Women Get Square Deal, Says Ismet Sanli.

By Malvina Lindsay.

AMERICAN women who used to feel sorry for their veiled Turkish sisters as pictured in the geographies now have good cause to envy them. For in the business world of Turkey one never hears the feminine plaint that the men get all the good jobs and raises. Nor do Turkish women have reason to voice the universal lament of their sex, "It's a man's world after all."

"A woman, if she's capable and well equipped, has an even better chance for recognition in the Turkish business or professional world than has a man," says Miss Ismet Sirri Sanli, young Turkish journalist who is a guest at the Turkish Embassy. "Perhaps that is because women's freedom in Turkey is comparatively new and men do not fear her competition. But whatever it is—well, it makes things very interesting for the women."

A glowing and vivacious symbol of the new feminine Turkey is Miss Sanli. Talking with her, one senses at once the eagerness and enthusiasm with which Turkish women are meeting the challenge of the man's world which has so recently been opened to them. For them the way lies straight ahead—there is no turning back to the harem, or more accurately speaking, the kitchen.

Harem Overemphasized.

"Don't say harem," cautions Miss Sanli, "for only a comparatively few of our women were in harems. Only the very wealthy men could afford harems. The transition of Turkish women was not so much from harem to the outside world as from a purely domestic status to participation in business and political affairs. The Turkish women lived secludedly, respected as a wife and mother, but with no voice in affairs outside her home. Now full educational, political and economic opportunities are open to her."

Strangely enough, the Turkish woman, stepping out of complete domesticity, began assaulting the problems of the outside world with a hope and eagerness that is foreign even to the women of America.

"We had the world for a model," explains Miss Sanli, "and we proceeded by the trial and error method, trying out what we thought were the best things other countries had to offer."

To Study America.

That feminine curiosity and idealism in Turkey is one of the things that brought Miss Sanli to this country; first, to study, and now to write and interpret American life, particularly along the lines of education and social welfare, for her countrywomen. Educated in Turkey and France, she also has degrees from the University of California and the University of Southern California, where she made special studies in political science. She writes and lectures under the name of Kismet Sirri, having adopted the first name after Americans insisted on putting a "K" in front of the Ismet. "Sirri" was her last name until 1935, when by government decree every family was required to take a family name embodying a family trait or tradition. The "Sanli" which Miss Sanli's father chose, means, appropriately enough, "victorious."

Those who maintain that women's first interests center around clothes and cosmetics may be surprised to learn that Turkish women, given their new toy of freedom, turned first of all to education. They flocked into the colleges and universities, according to Miss Sanli, and began preparing themselves to teach others. From there they turned their attention to politics and economics.

Glamour Rears Its Head.

However, at present, reports Miss Sanli, the glamour craze is also making itself felt in Turkey, and Paris fashions are being discussed along with educational and political affairs. Moreover, the two-career woman has come into the picture, an increasing number of Turkish women combining jobs with running their homes.

ISMET SIRRI SANLI.

Everywhere Miss Sanli goes she meets the inevitable question from romantics who wonder if Turkish women may not be a little sorry for giving up "lives of love" for lives of business. Very patiently she tries to explain that her countrywomen's emotional capacities have been in no way affected by the fact that they vote and hold jobs and that romance and mating goes on just the same in Turkey as before.

As to how the Turkish men feel about their "new women," the fact that they are giving them a fair deal in the political and economic world is the best answer, Miss Sanli believes.

"Oh, of course there is a little of the natural male feeling about the wife with the career," she explains. "But on the whole, Turkish men have been very good sports about it all."

How to Choose Your Clothes

WHAT is the secret of being well dressed? Any good dress designer will tell you:

"Know yourself! Find out what flatters your figure, your face, your coloring—and you'll outshine women with twice the money."

You can quickly see this from the pointers we've sketched for the woman who is slightly heavy in build.

Should she go Gibson Girl—with skirt and blouse full at the waist, contrasting belt, sleeves full at the wrist? No. These lines emphasize heavy waist and hips, make her figure dumpy, old.

For her are the long slender lines of the small-figured print on the right. These lines mold her figure, fit snugly at waist and hips, making them look smaller by flaring into a smart, natural fullness at the hem. The built-out fullness at shoulder also detracts from the size of her hips.

A high neckline emphasizes a short neck and square jaw; a V makes them less noticeable.

As for the flat-brimmed hat tied with a bow—it follows and accents a heavy jaw. But you never notice a square jaw when the hat is a snappy "bowl" model with an upward sweep.

Roosevelts Play Host to Fourth Estate As 1,500 Scribes Dance at White House

Several From Cabinet Circle Join President and Family for Gay Party; Guests Tread 'Reel;' Vandy Cape Sings.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

News scribes put away their typewriter sand notebooks last evening, donned their second-best bibs and tuckers and with their escorts flocked 1,500 strong to the White House for the annual Fourth Estate dance given by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Several from the Cabinet circle, a few friends from out of town, and members of the Roosevelt family also were in the gay company that assembled at the Executive Mansion at 9 o'clock and stayed until Ruby Newman's orchestra played its last note. The host and hostess received this year, as last, in the East Room. In former years, the Vice President and Mrs. Garner have also been on hand to greet the guests; but not last evening. The Vice President, it seems, is too worn out with events on Capitol Hill this season to stay up later than his usual bedtime—even for members of the press.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Tables set up in the lobby proved popular throughout the evening. There guests who preferred beer to dancing, or beer between dances, gathered. The East terrace was open, and despite the weather, newspapermen and women, with their respective escorts, strolled about there during the learlier part of the party. Fruit punch was served on the south portico, which was crowded most of the evening.

Following the brief program, a buffet supper was served in the state dining room, and later, a group of guests danced the Virginia Reel in the East Room. Mrs. Roosevelt and her brother, Hall Roosevelt, also took part, while the President was a highly entertained spectator.

"Singing Satirist" Entertains Crowd

The short program featured Miss Vandy Cape, whose "singing satires" turned out to be gentle spoofing of typical opera and concert singers. In one number, "Le Dernier Round-Up," the artist portrayed an American trying to negotiate an American song in French. In another, she depicted certain phases of a musicale in a TVA district where the lights, flashing on and off, were among the minor complications. Miss Cape, a former newspaperwoman, became a professional entertainer a few years ago when she discovered her musical satires had popular appeal. For last evening's party she had chosen a black and orange frock, set off with a brief bolero.

Miss Mayris Chaney, who is a frequent guest at the White House, and her dancing partner, Eddie Fox, presented a trio of numbers, including "The Blue Danube," "Begin the Beguine" and a modern "blues" dance. Miss Chaney's frock of flesh lace was fashioned with a full skirt, a fitted bodice and cap sleeves.

Several Cabinet officials were glimpsed in the throng of guests. The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull were there; also, the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr.; the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry Woodring, the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Harry A. Wallace, Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins.

Among others at the party were John Roosevelt and his fiancee, Miss Anne Lindsay Clark; Elliott Roosevelt, who arrived in Washington yesterday, and Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt. From New York had come Mr. and Mrs. John Regis (the former is better known as June Hamilton Rhodes). Charles Maybank, mayor of Charleston, S. C., and Mrs. Maybank, also were overnight guests at the White House.

Several Guests Attend Dinner

Prior to the dance, President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at dinner, their guests including presidents of local organizations of newspaper men and women.

Yesterday morning at Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference the question arose as to how invitations to the White House should be answered—whether the name of the person invited or the name of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt should come first. Authorities seem to be divided on the matter, but according to the current White House social secretary, Mrs. James M. Helm, the only difference in answering an invitation from the White House and any other is that one "has the honor" to accept in the former case and "has the pleasure" to accept in the latter. Anyway, no matter whether their invitations were correctly answered for the party last evening, the hundreds of guests had both the honor and the pleasure of being present, since the dance was one of the most successful of all those that have been given for the press.

Last of Regular Press Conferences for Season

Yesterday's press conference was the last regular one Mrs. Roosevelt will hold this season. From the end of this week until the Roosevelt-Clark wedding in Nahant, Mass., next month, the First Lady will spend much time in Hyde Park and New York City. However, she will be at the White House until Thursday of this week, when she leaves by motor for Arthurdale, W. Va.

This morning at 10 o'clock she will attend a meeting at the United States Office of Education, where Dr. John W. Studebaker will preside over a discussion of educational possibilities for delinquent children. Later, she will receive at the White House Dr. Willie L. Hurie, president of the College of the Ozarks.

This afternoon, the veterans' garden party, rained off the social calendar last week, will be given if weather permits. In case of inclement weather today the party will be postponed until tomorrow. At luncheon tomorrow the First Lady will entertain Miss Margaret Bondfield, member of the British Parliament, who will be the house guest of the Secretary of Labor.

Leaves Thursday For Arthurdale, W. Va.

Thursday morning at 9 o'clock, Mrs. Roosevelt will leave by motor for Arthurdale, W. Va., where she will attend graduation exercises at the Arthurdale School the following day. Accompanying her to the Federal homestead community will be Mrs. Morgenthau, Mr. and Mrs. George Bye, Harry Hooker, Mrs. Malvina T. Scheider and possibly, Bernard Baruch. On Friday the party will be joined by the President, who will go to Arthurdale by train. He and Mrs. Roosevelt will lunch with the senior class of the Arthurdale School that day. Later, he will make the commencement address and she will present diplomas to the 13 graduates.

Mrs. Roosevelt will drive back to Washington Friday evening and the following day she will motor to Hyde Park, the President going up the sa day by train. On Wednesday, June 1, the First Lady will go to Utica, N. Y., where she will speak before the women's division of the Democratic committee. On June 3, she will attend graduation exercises at Todhunter School and on June 9 she will give the commencement address at New York University.

Gives Away Her Last String of Pearls

Wedding presents to John Roosevelt and his fiancee from the President and Mrs. Roosevelt have already been sent, she said at the conference. Miss Clark now has the last string of pearls made from the pearl dog collar given to Mrs. Roosevelt as a wedding present from her own mother-in-law. Similar strands were given to brides of other sons of the Roosevelt family.

Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger, who are coming East to attend the Roosevelt-Clark wedding, will arrive in Hyde Park on Friday, June 10. According to present plans, Mrs. Roosevelt will return to the White House on Wednesday, June 15, and the following day will hold her press conference. On the afternoon of June 16, she and the President, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, will leave by train for Nahant, Mass. Arriving there, they will go directly to the President's yacht, the Potomac, which will be sent ahead. The President will stay on the yacht until time for the wedding. Afterward he will sail on the Potomac to Hyde Park.

Yesterday, following her press conference, Mrs. Roosevelt entertained Miss Julia A. Parker and 22 students of Bryn Mawr College at luncheon. Guests were seated at small tables in the state dining room.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE SEIZURE of Austria by the Germans and the opening of a negligee shop in Washington may seem to have very little connection. Yet Frau Prochnik, whose husband was Austrian Minister here until Hitler entered Vienna, is all set for her new clothes business and can hardly wait until the fall, when she will get started.

DUDLEY HARMON

"Next autumn," she said yesterday, "I'm going to design negligees for people and, if they want, make them myself." For years pretty and attractive Frau Prochnik has been designing and making clothes for herself and her children. In addition to her own sewing, she will also represent a New York lingerie house here.

• • • •

THE PROCHNIKS were among the guests at the small informal cocktail party given yesterday by Mrs. Emory Sands and Mrs. Pearsons Rust in honor of Mrs. Robert Scotten. No matter how far away Mr. and Mrs. Scotten are from America—and at the present Mr. Scotten's post is Brazil, where he is Counselor of the United States Embassy—they always manage to come back to Washington at least once a year. At present they are making their annual visit and are at the Anchorage. They will be here off and on for a month before trekking to Europe, where they will spend the summer.

The return of the Scottens is always the signal for a flurry of parties, and yesterday afternoon saw the preliminaries at the 1925 F Street Club. The guests consisted of Mrs. Scotten's close friends, of which she seems to have almost as many as Elsa Maxwell.

Sitting out in the garden yesterday the guests found it hard to believe that they were in the midst of a city. The back yard of the club never looked better, with the trees and flowers in full bloom, and comfortable chairs placed here and there. Viscount J. H. de Sibour remarked that he hoped they'd have Sands-Rust luck for the first of the spring dances at club, which takes place tomorrow evening, and has already had to be postponed once owing to the horrible weather we've been having.

• • • •

SEEN on the porch or in the garden yesterday were, among others, a trio of bachelors, Ralph Snowden Hill, Kemper Simpson and Commander Ralph Bates; George Howe, Mrs. Richard Southgate, Mrs. S. Kent Legare, in black and silver fox; Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Keith Officer and Benjamin Plunket.

Mrs. Mondell Gregg was an early arrival, and others who dropped in were Miss Rebecca Wellington, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock and the former's debutante daughter, Miss Fontaine Fahnestock; Mrs. Higginson Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. George Pulver, Mrs. Wallach Merriam, Miss Marian Trumbull, with a corsage of orchids; Mr. and Mrs. E. Cortlandt Parker.

• • • •

THREE former newspaper people and one newspaper lawyer got together last evening for a reunion. They were Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg and Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ellis, of Chicago, for whom the Vandenbergs entertained at a small dinner in their apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel.

In the days when Mrs. Vandenberg was a scribe on the Chicago Tribune, Mrs. Ellis was an artist for that paper. Senator Vandenberg formerly published a sheet, and Mr. Ellis is an attorney for the Trib. He and Mrs. Ellis are at the Mayflower for a few days.

Mrs. Wilber Gives Party for Father; 30 Guests Present

Hersh, of Allentown, Pa., and Philip N. Youtz, president of the Federation, who arrived yesterday with Mrs. Youtz from San Francisco.

Miss Kathryn Elizabeth Flynn yesterday afternoon became the bride of Fred Brannon Gary at a quiet ceremony in the sacristy of St. Matthew's Church. The Rev. William F. Stricker officiated at the wedding. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Helen Flynn, of this city. Mr. Gary is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gary, of Charlotte, N. C.

The bride was attired in a street-length dress of blue marquisette trimmed with bands of taffeta. She wore a small chiffon hat of dusty pink and carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

Miss Ruth Gary, sister of the bridegroom, was her only attendant and was attired in rose crepe and a matching hat. Her corsage was of roses. Joseph Gary, of Charlotte, served his brother as best man.

Following the ceremony, there was a wedding supper at Olney Inn, Olney, Md. At this event, Mrs. Flynn, mother of the bride, wore an afternoon dress of printed crepe. Mrs. Gary, mother of the bridegroom, was in navy sheer.

The couple, who left on a short motor trip, will make their home in Raleigh, N. C. The former Miss Flynn is a graduate of the University of North Carolina and Duke University. Mr. Flynn is an alumnus of both the University of Maryland and George Washington University.

Mexican Dance Will Help Fund

A representative number of diplomatic, official and social notables are planning to be on hand this evening for the recital of Mexican dances to be given by Mme. Basil de Toutorsky at Pierce Hall at 8:30 o'clock.

The program is being given for the benefit fund of the American International Academy, District of Columbia Chapter. The Academy was organized in 1898 for the purpose of promoting a better international understanding through the knowledge of arts and sciences.

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera head the list of sponsors for the recital. Mme. Toutorsky, dressed in a colorful Mexican costume, will present a number of unusual dances, including a fiesta dance, "Magenta and Blue," a Mexican shawl dance; "A Vision" (inspired by the madonnas in Mexican churches); and the "Xicatpextle" (the lacquered tray balanced on the head by Mexican flower vendors).

41 Members Welcomed By University Women

Mrs. Oleson, Incoming President, and Other Officers Are Honored at Tea and Musicale, Final Large Function of Season.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Forty-one new members of the American Association of University Women were welcomed by the Washington branch yesterday afternoon at a tea and musicale in the clubhouse. The affair, which was followed by a dinner, business meeting and a reception honoring Mrs. Robert L. Olesen, incoming president, and other new officers, was the final large club function of the season.

Mrs. Richard Hogue, retiring president, headed the receiving line with Mrs. Olesen, and Mrs. Paul E. Howe, who was chairman of the day, made the introductions. Mrs. Owen Lovejoy, one of the three new members who had been designated as honor guests, was next in line to the new president and later in the afternoon came Mrs. Emil Hurja and Senora de los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador. The latter was delayed awaiting the arrival of the Ambassador on his return from Spain.

Mrs. Hogue wore a sheer black dress with a black hat and Mrs. Oleson a rose-colored jacket suit with accents of blue. Mrs. Lovejoy wore black with a wide straw hat; Senora de los Rios a blue sheer trimmed in dubonnet and Mrs. Hurja, a navy blue suit with dusty pink trimmings.

The receiving line was in the sunken lounge of the clubhouse and the tea table was arranged in the upper lounge at the back, where Mrs. Leslie Whitten, retiring hospitality chairman was greeting guests. Mrs. Whitten wore a tailored dress of beige lace with a pleated skirt and a broad brimmed hat. Mrs. Horace Torbert, program chairman, who also was assisting, wore a rose-colored lace with a flower figure in blue.

Music for the occasion was provided by Mrs. Eugenia Botkin, violinist.

At the dinner, held in the club dining room on the second floor, committee chairmen presented reports of their year's work.

Mrs. Olesen, as chairman of the education committee, explained its effort to keep the club membership alert in educational trends and changes as well as directing the activities in various community problems. This year, in co-operation with the League of Women Voters, it has made a joint study of the board of education in the District and conducted research in housing problems, compiling a syllabus for a study of housing conditions.

Mrs. Olesen is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, holds a master's degree from the University of Cincinnati and has done graduate work at the University of Berlin. She is the wife of the assistant surgeon general of the United States Bureau of Health.

Other new officers serving with her are Miss Elsie Green, first vice president, who is administrative principal of Whittier School; Mrs. Earl Trager, recording secretary; Mrs. Robert McFall, treasurer, and Mrs. Glen L. Siggert, director.

A luncheon in honor of the president followed the board meeting. Others present were Mrs. Samuel Wassell, first vice president; Miss Clara Manderschied, recording secretary; Claudia Rice Scott, corresponding secretary; Marian Needham Taft, treasurer; Mrs. Cajigas, auditor; Margie Luckett, Baltimore, librarian; Mrs. Hamilton; Louise C. Jones Speaks At Club Forum

The wage-hour bill fight in Congress almost disarranged the plans of the Women's National Democratic Club for its final forum luncheon of the season Monday.

Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, scheduled to discuss the mechanics of government, was caught in the midst of the fight at the Capitol and did not arrive until the end of the luncheon, but in time to make a speech which praised our form of government as "the slowest moving but the fairest" in the world today. He also gave a swift summary of the situation touching farm problems.

Introduced by Mrs. Edward A. Keating as a Congressman who has been serving 22 years "even if he does not look it," Representative Jones proceeded to outline the workings of the Government.

"The one fundamental principle of our Government is that all men are created equal in the operation of the laws of the land; every bit of legislation should be looked at from that viewpoint," he declared.

Questioned on the protective tariff, he said: "We went along on the system of trying to abolish tariffs for a hundred years and got nowhere."

Federation of Women's Clubs Will Elect Officers Today

Mrs. E. H. Daniel Opposed by Mrs. A. C. Watkins for Presidency; Voting Machines to Be Used for Balloting.

Members of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, using voting machines, today will choose their officers for the coming year. Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel heads the ticket presented by the nominating committee in its report yesterday morning at the opening of the recessed annual meeting. Mrs. Arthur C. Watkins, other candidate for president, was nominated from the floor.

The only other office in which there are two candidates is that of treasurer, for which Mrs. Henry Fenno Sawtelle was slated by the nominating committee, and Mrs. William M. Collins nominated by the Capitol Hill History Club. Other officers nominated are Mrs. Ruth Snodgrass, second vice president; Mrs. Amassa A. Ludwig, recording secretary; Mrs. Pierce B. Ashburn, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Charles P. Kayser, auditor, and Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, retiring president of the District federation, director to the general federation.

The present positions of the two candidates for president, the one retiring as first and the other as second vice president, created an unusual situation yesterday when Mrs. Biddle was called from the room for a conference just before the first vice president presented her report.

It was necessary for the second vice president, Mrs. Watkins, to take the chair while Mrs. Daniel reported and for Mrs. Daniel to preside during Mrs. Watkins' report. Both were amused by the circumstances, maintaining the same friendly spirit which has characterized their entire campaign. Mrs. Daniel has the indorsement of the Political Study Club and Mrs. Watkins that of the W. C. T. U.

The voting will begin at 10 o'clock this morning and will close at 2 in the afternoon. The use of voting machines, arranged by Mrs. Biddle for the District Federation election as soon as she learned they had been obtained for the General Federation in Kansas City, will make it possible to have the returns promptly at the close of the election. Returns will not be officially announced, however, until the conclusion of committee reports.

Following a musical program by Mrs. Marie C. Deal of the Sunshine and Community Club, yesterday afternoon's session was devoted to brief reports of the various clubs which are members of the District Federation. There was also a report by Mrs. William E. Peters, chairman of motion pictures.

* * * *

The club's reports given include those of Abraham Lincoln Circle, Mrs. Sarah E. Deeds, president; Aid Association for the Blind, Miss Henrietta Metzerott, president; Baby Lovers Circle, Mrs. Eloy Bradley, secretary; Capitol Hill History Club, Miss Phebe Stine, president; Columbia Heights Art Club, Mrs. Charles K. Police Shatter Picket Lines in Three Strikes

Paper Resumes Publication; Rioting Occurs in 2 Illinois Cities.

By the Associated Press.

Pickets were beaten back yesterday in three struggles.

Officers, tossing tear-gas bombs, dispersed a crowd estimated at 500 near the News-Herald Building in Duluth, Minn. Publication of papers, suspended during a strike by the American Newspaper Guild on April 3, was resumed. The management said 215 of 289 employes returned to their jobs.

Several Thrown in Creek.

Police charged several hundred pickets massed by the C. I. O.-affiliated United Automobile Workers Union on a narrow bridge leading to the J. I. Case farm implement factory in Rockford, Ill.

A riot ensued. Clubs, rocks and fists were hurled. Several demonstrators were tossed over the railings of the span into a dry creek.

Four officers and several pickets were injured. Twelve pickets were arrested.

A representative of the company said 400 of the normal crew of 1,500 workers had entered the plant. Operations were not renewed, however, since 211 of those who returned were supervisory and office employes.

Kewanee Plant Closes.

Seven men—workers, pickets and officers—were injured in a hand-to-hand encounter near the Walworth Valve & Fitting Manufacturing plant in Kewanee, Ill. Observers estimated 300 workers entered the factory despite the efforts of the C. I. O.-affiliated steel workers organizing committee to block the gates. Later, however, the company, normally employing 1,900 workers, suspended operations "indefinitely."

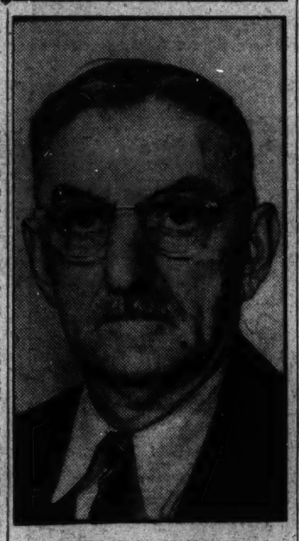
Meanwhile, rioting brought out British troops in Kingston, Jamaica, in the Caribbean, where street car workers joined some 5,000 waterfront laborers, street cleaners and others in a strike.

Failures Decline.

New York, May 23 (AP).—Business failures in the United States for the week ended May 19 dropped to 222, the smallest number since December last year, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. Last week the total was 231 while a year ago there were 187.

Retired Railway Mail Clerk Collects Cryptic Addresses

Zehring to Leave Famous Scrapbook to Post-office Department.



HARRY A. ZEHRUNG.

Twenty-four slips of yellowing paper, copies of the most cryptically addressed envelopes seen in 29 years of sorting mail, make up the unique scrapbook of Harry A. Zehrung, 62-year-old retired railway postal clerk now visiting in Washington.

Zehrung was "working the mail" one night in 1906 on a train rattling through Idaho, when he ran across this one:

"Odessa, Oreg. Will the P. M. please hand this to a cultivator of ginsing. There is a ginsing garden there but I do not know name of proprietor—please give to him."

It was that sort of thing encountered every six months or so, which made Zehrung feel the addressing habits of the more original fringe of American letter-writers should be preserved.

In 35,000 miles of travel in 48 States since his retirement in 1934, Zehrung has talked to hundreds of railway postal clerks but found none with his hobby. Now he plans to leave his collection to the Postoffice Department.

Explicit Address.

Probably the most explicit address in Zehrung's collection is this gem:

"Mister Josephine Ryan he live at 1721 2 st. It is on the right hand side of the street if you are coming downtown from the Buffalo Brewery, but if you get off the car at 17th and walk one block up to 2 st. it is on the right hand side of the street about two doors from 18th. There is a garden in the front of the house and some fruit trees in the back yard and Gus Lenords pie wagon is in the barn. (Beware of the dog) Sacramento, Calif.

True love appears to have been the inspiration for such poetic flights as the following exhibit:

"We sat on the Bridge at Sunset watching the Beaver play.
While John was thinking of Ada who lives at Winchester Bay.
Now Ada's name was Mercer so
please do not delay,
But deliver to my only who lives so far away."

There was method in this lyric effort, Zehrung points out, because all the capitalized words are names of Oregon postoffices. The postal clerk never knew whether such missives reached their final destination, his job being done when the letter was tossed into the appropriate sorting box.

The last item in Zehrung's scrapbook is dated 1920. In recent years, he explains a little sadly, letter-writers don't seem to have had time to dash off anything except the prosaic essentials of name, address, city and state. And the Postoffice Department these days is unsympathetic toward superfluous ornamentation of mail, preferring to classify such pieces promptly as "nixies" and send them to the dead-letter office.

Zehrung's 29-year span of service as a railway postal clerk was spent entirely in the thirteenth postal division, embracing Oregon, Washington Idaho, and Alaska. From 1898 to 1903 he was a railroad man in the same region, firing wood-burning locomotives.

Now after his retirement he has no address at all. "Home is where I hang my hat," he said in Washington yesterday, pausing on a trip from Portland, Oreg., via New Orleans, to New Jersey. He says he felt as though he were in jail when he stayed two months in Portland in 1935—that's the longest time he has stopped in one place for 35 years.

"Time doesn't mean anything to me. I go wherever I want whenever I feel like it," Zehrung says. When he hits a new town he usually looks up fellow railway postal clerks, but he's confident he won't find a collection of weird addresses to compare with his own.

C.I.O. Office Union Plans Wider Drive

The United Office and Professional Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, voted Sunday at the closing session of its five-day convention here to extend organizing activities into the fields of insurance, finance, and social service.

Lewis Merrill, of New York, was elected president of the union. Leo Allen, of San Francisco, was chosen first vice president. Eugene Turner, of Tucson, Ariz., was named secretary-treasurer.

The convention urged doubling the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board and defeat of the proposed wage cuts for railroad workers. Unity of A. F. of L. and C. I. O. on a basis of industrial unionism was indorsed. Delegates, protesting alleged discrimination against Negroes in District hotels and restaurants, approved the Kopplemann civil rights bill.

Dr. H. B. Raffensperger, Federal Employe, Dies

Moultrie, Ga., May 23 (AP).—Dr. H. B. Raffensperger, 61, Southeastern director of swine sanitation for the United States Department of Agriculture, died here Sunday.

He was widely known in livestock circles. He was transferred here from Miles City, Mont. He was a native of Newport, Pa., and had been with the zoological division of the Department of Agriculture 31 years.

Police said Coyne had confessed slaying Wendlandt, who was found shot five times in the patrol car in which he was taking Coyne to headquarters after the latter's arrest on a stolen car charge.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

DIPLOMATIC DIDO: An American just back from South America went to a fancy cocktail party, and the first lady to whom he was presented was Senora Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador.

"It's too bad you didn't stop in Mexico," she said politely, or words to that effect. But the American was sizzling.

* * * *

"Madame," said the business man, "In the country where I have been they merely won't let you take your money out of the country; they don't take it away from you, as they do in Mexico!"

Rep. Bernard . . fiery Corsican

Maybe this is the sort of thing that should be said occasionally in diplomatic circles, but it simply isn't done.

* * * *

CAPITAL CAPERS: Among the loyal opposition on the Hill there's a new phrase to describe the new pump-priming program . . . It's called "priming the primaries" . . . A Northern member thinks there should be a colored citizen on the watermelon control board, recently appointed.

* * * *

"—free speech in Jersey"

Among various strategems suggested to Representatives Bernard and O'Connell for making a speech in Boss Hague's Jersey City realm, two seem to have possibilities:

One is to hover above the square in an autogiro equipped with a loudspeaker.

The other is to creep to one of the roofs around the square in the dead of night, barricade the attic stairs, and megaphone a message to the startled citizenry below.

* * * *

On one of the recent Congressional junkets, it fell to the not unwilling hands of Representative Sol Bloom to plant a commemorative tree, to remind future generations of the historic occasion . . . This led Representative Mel Maas, of Minnesota, to immortalize the moment in a couplet: "Speeches are made by fools like me; but only Bloom can plant a tree."

WHISPERING GALLERY: One of Jim Farley's scouts was browsing around on the Hill. "What's on your mind today?" asked a Representative. "I'm looking for those 600 delegates that are supposed to be pledged to Farley for President by 1940," replied the emissary . . . Some Senators squawk a little about the lecture tours of Senators Wheeler and Nye; they'd like to hear more of their oratory on the Hill.

"—free-for-all in the Capital"

By one of those accidental congestions of rumor and gossip, the name of Sumner Welles, the discreet, personable Under Secretary of State, has been linked lately with three different schisms in the Capital.

If you believe all you hear, he has been embroiled with Ickes, on helium; with Roper, on transfer of foreign service personnel, and with his own boss, Cordell Hull, about lifting the Spanish embargo and about the President's statement on the Italo-British pact.

To look at him you wouldn't suspect he's been in any melee at all; he's completely unruffled, as usual, and isn't even breathing hard.

* * * *

PAJAMA PORTRAITS

SOLON FROM CORSICA.

In the current warfare against Boss Hague, Jean Toussaint Bernard, of Minnesota, is the ally of Jerry O'Connell, the Montana flash . . . The combination of a Corsican and an Irishman is proving fairly formidable for the benevolent dictator of Jersey City . . . It was Representative Bernard who delayed the embargo on shipping arms to the Spanish Loyalists long enough to permit a shipload of planes to get away . . . The ship was later sunk as it approached the Iberian coast . . . Bernard is stocky, fiery, full of shrugs and gestures . . . He was 14 when he emigrated and his accent is one of the most interesting in the House, which is still something of a melting pot . . . He has a little black mustache, but no tolerance for Hitler . . . When this Gaelic-Latin entente reaches a showdown with Hague the sparks are certain to fly.

* * * *

POTOMAC PIFFLE: With only a couple of hours left till train time, my mother-in-law gave the Supreme Court 20 minutes, the Zoo an hour and 40 minutes, but passed up the White House . . . Representative Secrest, of Ohio, is studying law in spare hours while saving the Nation . . . Overheard in the Senate dining room—I think it's from Voltaire: "History is the sound of work boots going up the stairs, of the shuffle of silken slippers coming down."

Senate Group Will Consider D.C. Bills Today

Alley Dwelling and PWA Measures Before Committee Today.

Amendments to the Alley Dwelling Authority act and the District PWA loan law will be considered by the Senate District Committee today, with more than a half dozen other pending local bills.

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, in scheduling a meeting for 3 o'clock this afternoon, said he would have the bills ready for Senate action on the next consent calendar day.

The District Committee chairman has indicated his approval of both measures although there may be some amendments made to the ADA proposals. The House District Committee has already altered the latter.

An extensive low-cost housing program, as well as slum clearance, and a possible municipal construction plan involving $18,500,000 are provided for in the bills.

Among other bills which are to be acted on are proposals to modernize the zoning act, to amend the District revenue act, and to change the law relative to the registration of liens on autos.

On the other side of the Capitol Representative Jenckes (Democrat), Indiana, as chairman of a health sub-committee of the House District Committee, will hold a hearing on a bill to regulate the practice of dentistry in Washington.

Chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committee, still hopes to call up some of the 11 District bills on the House calendar tomorrow during consideration of the consent calendar.

No controversial bills, however, will be acted on unless members withdraw their objections.

Court Turns Down Jury Trial Appeal In Soliciting Case

Dozens of cases of soliciting will be pushed to an early Police Court trial as a result of a ruling by the United States Court of Appeals yesterday that the defendants were not entitled to a jury trial, despite a recent act of Congress greatly increasing the possible sentence.

The case concerned Gladys Bailey, who was picked up shortly after the new law went into effect.

Appealing from conviction, she contended the law entitled her to a jury trial because of the penalties of $100 fine and 90 days in jail that could be imposed. The Court of Appeals held that solicitation was a misdemeanor, and as such not indictable.

Labor Pushes Basic Pay Law For Maryland

State-D. C. Federation Also Opposes Liquor Tax Boost at Session.

By the Associated Press.

Frederick, Md., May 23.—A resolution recommending adoption of a standard minimum wage law in Maryland, similar to statutes adopted in other States, won unanimous approval today at the opening session of the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor's thirty-third convention.

The resolution was one of a dozen considered and passed without argument in rapid-fire order which put the business portion of the three-day convention nearly a day ahead of schedule.

A telegram from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, with which the organization is affiliated, expressed his regrets at inability to attend and asserted "those who have organized and fostered dual unions such as the C. I. O., are responsible for the division and discord and bitterness . . . in the ranks of labor."

Reading of the telegram, the sole mention of the C. I. O. before the convention, was greeted with cheers.

The federation unanimously indorsed John Locher, its vice president, and president of the Washington Central Labor Union, as a candidate for Presidential appointment as Commissioner of the District of Columbia to fill a vacancy which will be created when Commissioner George E. Allen resigns in September.

Other resolutions:

Opposed further increase in the State tax on alcoholic beverage on grounds such increases would work a hardship on employes of distilleries.

Approved a legislative "fight" to amend the State compensation law to cover occupational diseases and to secure enactment of "proper" barber licensing law.

Approved extension of Federal civil service to cover all Government employes in Washington.

Opposed operation of slot machines and pinball devices, which "lead laboring men to spend nickels which should go for food and clothing."

Opposed a 15 per cent wage cut proposed by railroads effective July 1.

President Joseph P. McCurdy opened the convention with a demand for recodification of the State child labor laws and broadening of the scope of the State unemployment compensation act.

The Baltimorean gave his report before more than 200 delegates and guests, including Gov. Nice.

D. C. Pastors Urge Return To Religion

Leaders of Three Faiths Appeal for Revival as Aid to Democracy.

Three-Point Program Is Offered to Unite Churches in Drive.

Three Washington religious leaders, representing the Catholic, Protestant and Jewish faiths, last night united in urging a return to religion as the foundation of democracy in America.

They were the Rev. John K. Cartwright, pastor of Church of the Immaculate Conception; Rabbi Abram Simon, of Washington Hebrew Congregation, and the Rev. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church. Their addresses, delivered before 350 persons in Chamber of Commerce Building, were broadcast over Station WRC.

Message by President.

The Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, canon of Washington Cathedral, who presided, read a message from President Roosevelt, which said:

"I am glad to learn that the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital is unwearied in its work to promote good will among all of our citizens. It gives me great pleasure to wish Godspeed to your labors.

"An ancient prophet of Israel pointed the way to our ideal many years ago in the simple admonition: 'What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?'"

Father Cartwright declared there were three important "planks" for a united religious platform—"the existence of God, the Ten Commandments, and the radical difference of man from the beasts."

He said the suggestions that man is nothing more than an animal, represented trends of thought "which are largely responsible for the breakdown in our children's minds of religious belief, for the destruction in their conduct of all moral behavior."

Emotion vs. Science.

Warning that the personal notions of scientists have often been regarded as science, Father Cartwright said "when the chemist or physicist tells us that he has found no soul in man, we are listening only to his personal experience." When such findings go into textbooks, Father Cartwright asserted, they undermine both religion and society.

Rabbi Simon declared that "the greatest need of this industrial age in our American democracy is the religious need."

"When religion has been awakened to its highest efficiency it will arouse and interpret the conscience and the Constitution of this Nation. Religion is more than a social and political program. It is the gateway to tomorrow."

Dr. McCartney warned against the growth of secularism, with thousands of persons "giving themselves over to the pagan idea of nature." He scored "the shameless growth of sensualism, expressing itself in utter disregard for the sanctity of the marriage relationship, and the place of virtue in the economy of civilization."

Light Showers Due in D.C. Today

While heavy storms blasted the northeast section of the country, Washington and vicinity last night was subjected to a violent thunderstorm and high wind which, in two instances, blew down trees and blocked the entrances to homes.

Firemen were called to remove two trees that crashed in the 200 block of Eighth street northeast and in the 700 block of E street northeast. No one was injured in either case although police reported considerable damage to homes.

A 76-degree temperature was broken at 11 a. m. yesterday by showers which continued intermittently throughout the afternoon and evening. The Weather Bureau sent out storm warnings along the northeastern coastline but predicted that only light showers would strike Washington today.

Explorers Dine at Zoo Here —And No One Makes Speech!

Dr. William M. Mann achieved a rare ambition last night when Washington members of the Explorers Club, their wives and one mother-in-law dined in the Zoo Restaurant.

"One of my great hobbies," said Dr. Mann, "is to get a group together and have no speeches. It's a rare event when I gratify that hobby."

"But," he added, smilingly, "I did tonight."

The explorers, who, according to Dr. Mann, "have been to places the other fellow hasn't been to and done things the other fellow hasn't done," refreshed their memories of strange and exotic corners of the world with a trip to the small mammal house before dinner and to the reptile house at the evening's close.

In addition to Dr. Mann, his wife and Mrs. Josephine Quarry, his mother-in-law, the 32 guests included Dr. Philip S. Smith, chief Alaskan geologist of the Geological Survey, and Mrs. Smith; J. G. Staack, chief topographic engineer of the survey; Col. C. H. Birdseye, of the survey, and Mrs. Birdseye, and Col. Lawrence Martin, chief of the map division Library of Congress, his wife and daughter.

R. H. Sargent, who worked at the Zoo 30 years ago and is now connected with the Geological Survey, was present with his wife; Capt. H. T. Cowling, who has explored in the Balkans; Prof. Howard E. Shanz, former president of the University of Arizona and now with the Department of Agriculture, and his wife, and Maj. Richard Evans, of the survey, and Mrs. Evans also attended the dinner.

Designer Claims Streamlining Is Not Functional

There is no streamlined locomotive on the rails which "expresses a fraction of the functional beauty of a good old-fashioned steam engine," Eugene Schoen, noted architect and designer, yesterday told delegates to the twenty-ninth annual convention of the American Federation of Arts.

Speaking in a panel session on "Industrial Design," Schoen said modern trains, both in their exterior and interior, reveal a straining after prettiness and novelty."

"You squirm and tie yourself up in a streamlined automobile," he continued, "because comfort and safety have been subordinated to a false standard of appearance."

Schoen urged that ocean-liners now being built in the United States with public money "should reflect the artistic aspirations of the American people."

Veterans' Ladies Present Tableaux

Officials of many Washington patriotic societies attended Mother's Day services held at the Jewish Community Center last night by Washington Ladies Auxiliary No. 58, Jewish War Veterans of the United States.

Members of the auxiliary presented two patriotic tableaux. One represented Hayn Solomon, Jewish patriot who helped finance the Revolution; the other illustrated the aims and ideals of the American Constitution.

Five original members of the auxiliary, Mrs. Sara Berlin, Mrs. Mary Silverberg, Mrs. Marie Cohen, Mrs. Judith Harmel and Mrs. Rae Orlove, presented an altar cloth to the auxiliary. Mrs. Sidney B. Diamond, president, accepted the offering.

Rabbi Solomon Metz, of Adas Israel Congregation, spoke on the need for peace.

Judicial Control Of F. C. C. Denied

Judicial control of the Federal Communications Commission "would be clearly an impingement" upon its jurisdiction, the United States Court of Appeals for the District ruled yesterday.

The ruling came in an opinion sustaining the action of the commission in granting station WATR, Waterbury, Conn., permission to change frequency, increase power and operate on an unlimited basis.

The Pittsburgh Radio Supply House, Intermountain Broadcasting Corporation, and head of the Lakes Broadcasting Co., fought the ruling on the ground it would interfere with the operation of their properties. The court held they had no appealable interests.

'Interim' Suffrage Urged for District

Leaders of the District suffrage movement last night named a committee of six to urge immediate enactment of legislation giving Washington residents an advisory voice in city government, as an "interim measure" pending achievement of full self-government.

Members of the delegation, chosen from the executive committee of the campaign council and resolutions committee of the Citizens Conference on District suffrage, are Wilbur S. Finch, William H. Mondell, Charles Thomas, Sidney Katz, Mrs. Clara Wright Smith and Mrs. Marguerite L. Krenek.

A. F. L. Backs Plan for D. C. Labor Agency

Single Department Advocated at Painters' Anniversary.

Bryce P. Holcombe and Mrs. Jenckes Address Meeting.

"The entire resources" of the American Federation of Labor will be thrown behind efforts to obtain a department of labor for the District of Columbia, Bryce P. Holcombe, business agent for the Painters and Decorators Local Union, No. 368, last night told an audience of 800 persons in the Willard Hotel.

Addressing union members and their guests at a banquet celebrating the local's thirty-seventh anniversary, Holcombe said he had received personal assurance from William Green of Nation-wide A. F. of L. support for the proposal to create in the District government an agency co-ordinating enforcement of all legislation affecting labor.

Mrs. Jenckes Cheered.

Holcombe traced the rise of Local 368 since its organization, contrasting the present wage scale for District painters, $11 for a seven-hour day, with the $2.80 paid for a day's work in 1901.

A prolonged ovation greeted a prediction by Representative Jenckes (Democrat), of Indiana, that "the wage-hour bill is going to pass tomorrow."

"In spite of everything said about industrial unionism, it is more or less forced on us," said Lawrence P. Lindelof, international president of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, whose 117,000 members are aligned with the A. F. L in its rivalry with the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Schedler Also Speaks.

Lindelof cited absorption by the brotherhood of automobile painters, sign painters, landscape artists and workers in paint and varnish factories as evidence of the trend toward industrial unionism.

With a return of prosperity national membership in the painters' union would reach 150,000, he stated, "and with that we can control the painting industry and establish our working conditions on a yearly basis. No more of this $1 or $1.25 an hour business."

"Democracy is certain to survive in this ever-changing world," said Carl Schedler, Department of Labor attorney, if trade unions are "eternally vigilant."

Citizens Urge D.C. Resident For Allen Post

Trinidad and Mid-City Association Calls for Bona Fide D.C. Man.

Appointment of a bona fide District resident to the vacancy created on the Board of Commissioners by George E. Allen's resignation was demanded in resolutions adopted last night by the Trinidad and Mid-City Citizens' Associations.

The Trinidad group in another resolution requested that the Alley Dwelling Authority be empowered to erect low-cost housing projects in regions not technically classified as "alleys."

Asks Recreation Center.

A committee was named by Trinidad to urge upon the Board of Commissioners creation of a recreation center in the Trinidad area. A petition supporting the proposal has been signed by more than 1,300 citizens, it was announced.

Other resolutions passed by the association called for an eight-hour day for employes of Gallinger Hospital and improved bus service in the Northeast district.

Oppose Name Change.

The association also opposed a Senate bill to change the name of the section of M street west of Connecticut avenue to Rhode Island avenue.

The Georgetown Citizens Association, holding its annual open house meeting last night, heard descriptions of plans for renovation of the old Chesapeake & Potomac Canal. E. I. Lewis, president of the association, showed motion pictures of the canal while B. H. Meyer, a vice president, described the new trail from the Appalachian Mountains to the Shenandoah Valley.

16 WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1938 ★★★

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Chicago, May 23. — The late Charles Comiskey's legacy to his son Lewis consisted of a tidy sum of cash, complete ownership of the Chicago White Sox, and the Woodland Bards Club. You have heard tell of this thing called cash, no doubt, and the chances are that you know that the White Sox are an entry in the American League, and a very profitable one, but you don't know about Woodland Bards Club.

POVICH.

It's an incongruous throwback to Nature suspended among the maze of steel girders beneath the grandstands at Comiskey Park. Within earshot of the roar of the crowds and the crack of ball bouncing off bat, the Woodland Bards Club is an amazing retreat from the hot action on the ball field.

It's a hunting lodge in a big league ball park, of all places. It was the late Mr. Comiskey's refuge from cares. There, after living through his White Sox's ball games, he was wont to gather his friends and, beneath the trophies of his hunts, lift a beer and make hearty talk.

To this department's unappreciative eye, the Woodland Bards Club looks, more than anything else, like a stuffed zoo. From the oaken walls are suspended antlered moose heads. In the panels are mounted finny prizes of the deep. Within one glass case reposes the stuffed form of what surely must be the largest white rabbit ever to fall before a hunter's aim. A zebra head looks out from the farthest wall. But here is the paradise of the naturalist, for we understand that the display is a triumph of the taxidermists' art. A huntsman bold and true of aim must have been the late Mr. Comiskey, for these are the trophies of his rifles, his dogs and his fowling pieces.

Save for the zebra head, this might be a transplanted patch of the north woods where chipmunks frisk in the trees, trout leap in the streams, and life is at its best.

* * * *

The old first baseman of the St. Louis Browns, who used to be a teammate of Clark Griffith's when the 68-year-old Old Fox was a raw rookie, would find all as he left it were he to leave his celestial resting place and return to the Woodland Bards Club. For his son has rigidly respected his Father's fondness for the place even to the point of placing the late Mr. Comiskey's hat and cane on the same little oaken table beyond the banquet board where they always lay when his father presided. It is a reverential gesture in this north woods setting.

And like his daddy used to do, Lou Comiskey, now 52, presides over the gatherings of the Woodland Bards Club. There, to the family's friends, to loyal White Sox rooters, retired White Sox stars and newspapermen, Lou Comiskey serves the same homely dishes that his father liked, corn beef and cabbage, duckling and wild fowl, and there is of course, beer.

It was in the delightful informality of the Woodland Bards Club that the White Sox manager, Jimmy Dykes, today disclaimed all animosity toward Zeke Bonura, the Chicago favorite he traded away to the Washington Club last March. Dykes' reported personal dislike for Bonura had led to the trade, newspaper reports had said. Big Zeke had said that he and Dykes had had differences and the reports were seemingly dignified. But Dykes, lifting a couple of beers today, after rain that washed out the scheduled game had driven him indoors, laughed off the suggestion that he didn't like Bonura.

* * * *

"I used to ride him—sure," said Dykes. "Just like I'd climb on any of my ball players when I thought it would help. Zeke wasn't any exception. The trouble was, though, that he was too sensitive. He used to take it to heart and honestly thought I didn't like him. That wasn't true, of course. It is not hard to like Bonura. That big, good-natured guy could get along with anybody. He should know that some of the things that we say on the ball field don't count after the game is over. I never spare my ball players. I'm a pretty good barker, I guess, and I get pretty sharp-tongued, but only an innocent guy like Zeke would take it to heart and get sore about it.

"Take it out here, yesterday, it was pretty hard for me to resist ribbing a guy when I've got the drop on him. That's half the fun in baseball. Well, there was Zeke Bonura out there trying to make a hit with the Chicago fans first time he came here in a Washington uniform. I saw him standing near the batting cage while we were taking batting practice.

"Just for the fun of it I told Umpire Bill Summers to run Zeke off the field; that he didn't have any right to be out there. It didn't make any difference to us, of course, but I thought I'd have some fun with Bonura. Summers chased him off the field and you should have seen Zeke's face turn red!

"He stopped by our dugout to get a drink from the fountain and I couldn't resist taking another shot at him. 'Move on,' I said gruffly, and Zeke was apologetic when he said, 'I'm not doing anything—just taking a drink.' They asked me to pose for a picture with Zeke while he was in our dugout and I said 'Nuts! Nothing doing.' Zeke doesn't know when a guy is giving him the rib. He just hung his head and walked away. How are you going to hate a guy like that? He's just a great big small boy. Honest, he's one of my favorite people."

Pirates Score Early, Beat Giants, 4 to 3

Fine Relief Pitching by Brown and Bauers Halts Leaders.

(Picture on Page 17.)

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 23.—The Pittsburgh Pirates finally beat the pacesetting New York Giants today, but it took some fine relief pitching by Mace Brown and Rus Bauers to do it.

After dropping three decisions to the league champions, the Pirates came through with a 4-to-3 decision. The defeat reduced the Giants' margin to two and a half games over the Chicago Cubs, who turned back the Bees.

The Pirates did all their scoring in the first inning off Harry Gumbert and the Giants made all their runs in the fourth off Cy Blanton with Mel Ott delivering his eighth homer of the season with Jimmy Ripple on base.

The Giants blasted Blanton from the mound in their rally, but Mace Brown checked the attack and had the situation well in hand until forced to retire in the sixth when Mickey Haslin's line single knocked him to the ground. Brown was struck near the solar plexus and was in great distress. However, he walked to the clubhouse supported by teammates.

Bauers held the Giants at bay the remainder of the game but Brown received credit for the victory, his sixth as against two losses.

Although Gumbert dropped his third game, he tied a National League record, held by four other pitchers, when he was credited with 10 assists.

Handley's triple sent the Pirates away to their four runs. Vaughan's single drove him across the plate and after Rizzo had been hit by a pitched ball, Todd doubled and Dickshot, who replaced Paul Waner in the line-up, came through with another single to account for the other three tallies.

Cubs Defeat Bees, 4-1.

Boston, May 23.—Making the most of their five hits off Lou Fette, the Chicago Cubs snapped the Boston Bees' winning streak at seven games today and held safe their second position in the National League with a 4-1 victory.

The defeat cost the Bees a chance to move into second place and dropped them to fourth place behind the Cincinnati Reds, who defeated the Dodgers.

Gabby Hartnett sent the Cubs away in front in the second inning when he connected with his fourth homer of the year after Frank Demaree had walked. A bad throw by Debs Garms in the fifth, coupled with two of the four passes handed out by Fette and Augie Galan's single, gave the Cubs their other two tallies.

Bill Lee limited the Bees to six hits, but three times was saved by the brilliant work of Billy Herman, who came up with as many hit-saving plays at second. The Bees put over the only run in the fourth on singles by Garms, Rabbit Warstler and Fette.

War Admiral-Seabiscuit Duel Seen Test of Temperaments

War Admiral Likes to Get It Over Quick, But Biscuit Waits for Stretch Drive.

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 23.—One of the most remarkable things about this War Admiral-Seabiscuit $100,000 match race at Belmont Park next Monday is the way all the elements piece together to make it a natural clashing of opposites. A Ziegfeld or a Rickard scarcely could have done better.

The more fanciful are comparing the two equine antagonists to Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney, though it seems a little tough on the Admiral to cast him in the Dempsey role before he has swung a punch. Generally speaking, though, there is a similarity, and even the rival jockeys fit into the picture.

War Admiral is a spirited, high-strung hunk of horseflesh who likes to come out swinging and get it over with. Sea Biscuit doesn't work himself into a lather about any horse race. He feels, very sensibly, that the important thing is to have his nose in front at the finish.

That the Biscuit's nose hasn't been quite long enough on several important occasions is no fault of his reasoning. A number of busybodies, like Harry Greb, climbed all over Gene Tunney at one time or another, but he got his handsome proboscis under the wire first on each occasion that he sampled Dempsey's early foot.

Charlie Kurtsinger, who will ride the Admiral, is a lot like his famous steed. He's a chatty, cocksure little guy who is busy every second when his horse starts running, though he never has laid a whip on War Admiral more than a couple of times.

"Sure, I'm going to jump right out in front and keep going," he says, confidently, "because I know War Admiral can outrun any horse on the track today. I hope Sea Biscuit makes it close, though."

Red Pollard is different. He's tall for a jockey, towering nearly a head above Kurtsinger, and he's as quiet and contained as Seabiscuit. All he could think of to say at a recent conclave of the sound movies was, "I hope we win."

He rides with what is known in the fraternity as a "straight back." That is, he stands high up in his short stirrups and makes a horizontal line from his hip pockets to his head. He sits easy and lets Seabiscuit do the running. Kurtsinger climbs up on War Admiral's neck and hustles.

Ross Ready For Title Go

By the Associated Press.

Grossinger Lake, N. Y., May 23.—Barney Ross, fit and ready for his welterweight title defense against Henry Armstrong next Thursday night, broke camp today and headed for a final tuneup in Stillman's gymnasium, New York.

Figuring he was getting too fine an edge, Barney decided upon a non-boxing drill in his farewell appearance here. He went through seven rounds of rope skipping and calisthenics, weighed out at a fraction over 141 and then motored to New York. Since he came here April 30, he boxed a total of 63 rounds in 15 boxing sessions.

As Barney broke camp, Co-manager Art Winch professed so much optimism that he said he wouldn't be surprised if he retained his crown by a knockout.

"During his stay here," gloated Winch, "Barney gained perfection in not only condition but in speed, boxing skill and punching prowess. He will enter the ring ready to travel 15 of the fastest rounds of his career, if necessary. Barney has shown us that he is punching harder and it wouldn't surprise us if he retained the title by a knockout."

Armstrong Battles.

Pompton Lakes, N. J., May 23 (AP).—Instead of loafing through his drill today, Henry Armstrong opened up with a furious attack against sparring partner Frankie Genovese, the Canadian welterweight who has been giving him stiff opposition in his workouts for his title match against Barney Ross.

Henry and Frankie opened easily enough, but soon forgot it was "all in fun" and treated the few spectators to a Donny Brook battle, with Henry the master the three furious rounds it lasted.

As in their week-end sessions, Genovese, using a fast left and a snappy right, gave Hammerin' Henry plenty of trouble, but the Negro challenger's tireless two-fisted attack left the Canadian a weary, beaten man at the finish.

The milling probably will be the last until the challenger meets Ross Thursday night.

Reds Defeat Dodgers, 6-4

Victory Shoves Them Into 3d Place in Race.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, May 23.—The Cincinnati Reds moved into third place in the National League standings today when, with a 6-to-4 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers, they chalked up their fourth successive triumph.

The Reds knocked Bill Posedel off the mound in the third inning with a five-run attack and counted their other tally in the seventh off Vito Tamulis, who hurled the last six innings in making his debut in a Dodger uniform.

Gene Schott was credited with the victory, but had assistance from Joe Cascarella, who went to the mound in the sixth and checked a Brooklyn rally.

James Is Winner In Aurora Feature

Chicago, May 23 (AP).—James, a dark brown colt owned by W. H. Goelitz, of Oak Park, Ill., made his racing debut an auspicious one at Aurora today by scoring a length and a half victory over Teperwine.

Oh Fudge was third as James raced the 4½-furlong fourth race in 58 seconds, over the deepest and heaviest track of the meeting.

James, a son of St. James and Flapper Fanny, ridden by Dale Edwards, was well placed from the start. Edwards began his move with James as Teperwine and Oh Fudge raced one-two into the stretch. He pulled his first starter out in front with ease and was increasing the margin at the wire. James paid $32.20.

Berger Fixture at Shortstop With White Sox, Says Dykes

Ranks With Peck in Fielding; Also Is Team's Second Best Hitter.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, May 23.—Lou (Bozie) Berger, the Washington boy who has been batting around the big leagues to no purpose for nigh onto a half-dozen years, has seemingly found his niche here with the Chicago White Sox.

A display by the celestial water works had washed out the Nats' scheduled game with the White Sox and Manager Jimmy Dykes found time to pay tribute to the former Tech High School and Maryland University lad.

"He's arrived," said Dykes. "I'll bet on that. I've never seen such improvement in a ball player. We haven't missed Luke Appling much, if at all."

When Dykes mentioned the name of Appling, he was mentioning the name of the man who in 1936 had been the No. 1 shortstop of the league and had won the league batting championship, so it was a better than fair tribute to the tall, good-looking Berger boy. "I always knew he was a pretty fair fielder and had an iron arm," said Dykes. "But I never realized he was that good a ball player; why, this Berger has been a sensation. He's been making plays out there that remind me of Roger Peckingpaugh. He goes to either side and can come in fast and his nice pair of hands don't hurt him.

"Not only that, but he's started to hit. In the last ten games he hasn't missed. Those pitchers who used to throw him those curve balls and laugh are getting careful now. He's seen so many curves, he's learned how to sock 'em. That can happen, too. I remember when they used to get Goose Goslin out on slow balls. Later, the Goose murdered the slow stuff.

"Appling won't be back in the lineup until July 4, at the earliest, but we haven't missed him—not yet. I liked Berger when he was with Cleveland, but they told me he couldn't hit curve-ball pitching. They must have been misinformed."

Berger, whose average is a modest .287, which includes a generous sprinkling of extra-base hits, is the

Phils' Rally Beats Cards

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, May 23.—The Phillies overcame an early 5-run lead to defeat St. Louis, 7 to 6, today and sweep their two-game series.

Hugh Mulcahy, pitching for the Phils, scored the winning run in the eighth inning. Singles by Mulcahy and Martin and Young's infield out put the pitcher on third. Arnovich's drive, which was too hot for Gutteridge, brought Mulcahy home.

The Phillies made 13 hits off Lanier, Harrell and Ryba. Ryba was charged with the defeat.

1 Up Victory By Ouimet Ends Battle

Others Have Easy Time; Dunkelberger Loses in Opening Round.

By the Associated Press.

Troon, Scotland, May 23.—Surviving the relentless Scottish wind and rain, six of America's Walker Cup players marched through the opening day's play of the British Amateur Golf Championship today and ran headlong into each other.

Blown off their feet, drenched and blue with cold, they took everything Scotland and the opposition had to offer and came out without a defeat.

Led by Veteran Francis Ouimet, team captain who hung on to gain a 1-up victory over P. J. Urlwin-Smith, the Cuppers came home with the following triumphs:

Charles (Chuck) Kocsis, of Detroit, 7 and 5 over R. W. Crummack; Marvin (Bud) Ward, of Olympia, Wash., 5 and 3 over Israel Sidebottom; United States Champion Johnny Goodman, of Omaha, 7 and 5 over Robert Montgomerie; Ray Billows, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 3 and 2 over Raymond Quilter, and Reynolds Smith, Dallas, Tex., 4 and 2 over Peter Koch de Gooreynd.

They start eliminating each other tomorrow.

Fischer Meets Yates.

Johnny Fischer, of Cincinnati, and Charley Yates, of Atlanta, who walked around together today in the huge galleries, must battle it out in a first-round match starting at 8:30 a. m. (2:30 a. m., E. S. T.) tomorrow. Goodman and Billows second-round opponents tomorrow, will replay their 1937 match for the United States amateur title which Goodman wone, 2 up, in 36 holes.

Ouimet plays Dr. William Tweddell, 1936 British Walker Cup captain, and Fred Haas, jr., of New Orleans, the other American team member, makes his first start against A. J. Ashworth.

Three Americans—Bobby Dunkelberger, of High Point, N. C.; Charles S. Munson, jr., of Fairfield, Conn., and Yale, and Arthur V. Rogers, jr., Oxford student from Winchester, Mass., who was entered from a French club—actually did go out in today's play. But the only Walker Cupper who had a real tussle was Ouimet.

He was Old Man Par himself for nine holes, but going "round the bend," that treacherous waste of gorge and grass and sand, he collapsed.

Ouimet Loses Lead.

"I started peeping at that yellow gorse," said Francis with a laugh, "then I started hitting a few off the heel of my club and, first thing I knew, my lead was gone."

When he started out along the sea, the wind was against him. By the time he started back it had veered and was blowing even harder from the opposite direction. At the 556-yard sixteenth, into the teeth of this gale, Ouimet hit three perfect full woods and still had to chip to the green.

Seeing this, the officials of Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews decided that the rest of the boys should play from the ladies' tees there, as well as at the tenth and eighteenth.

About the only upset of the day was the 2 and 1 defeat of Charles Stowe, British Walker Cup player, by D. W. Turner, another Englishman. The other British cuppers came through, while Rex Hartley, a former Walker Cupper, had to go to the twentieth to beat J. Cameron Conn and Andy Jamieson, the baker boy who once beat Bobby Jones, went down before Armour Mathews, of South Africa, 1 up.

But Jamieson's not a baker boy now and he's not the golfer he was then, so even this was not remarkable.

The American who really surprised the boys was Kocsis. He took to the wind and the sea like a swallow and was knocking the pins out of the cups most of the afternoon. When he did stray, the Detroiter chipped up and rammed down putts from all over the place.

Ward Regains Form.

Ward also regained his form. He had been boomeranging his shots in practice all last week, but his hook was gone and he may do some giant-killing before the tournament is over.

C. Ross (Sandy) Somerville, of London, Ontario, Canadian and former U. S. titleholder, also boosted his stock in eliminating Geoffrey Illingworth, 5 and 3. He is nearly 30 yards longer than when he won the American championship in 1932.

An unknown played the best golf of the day. He was Jocelyn Walker, son of the famous Johnny, who beat Stanley Lunt, 4 and 3. Lunt went out in 34, 2 under par, through the worst part of the gale and yet was 3 down. Walker, former Cambridge University captain, reached the turn in 31. After that it was easy.

The galleries today were big and mannerly. Trains rolled in from Glasgow every half-hour as West Scotland decided to celebrate the King's birthday ahead of time in order to combine it with the championship.

France Sweeps Davis Cup Match

Marseilles, May 23 (AP).—France's Davis Cup team made a clean sweep of its second round tie with Monaco by capturing the concluding singles matches today. Henri Bolelli beat Alex Noghes, 6—1, 6—1, 6—2, and Pierre Pelizza beat Gaston Medicin, 6—2, 6—1, 3—6, 6—4. France will meet the Poland-Italy winner in the next round.

Zagreb, May 23 (AP).—Yugoslavia completed the job of eliminating Great Britain from the Davis Cup today when Ferenc Puncec and his partner, Demeter Mitic, defeated D. W. Butler and L. W. Wilde, 7—5, 6—3, 3—6, 5—7, 6—3, in the doubles.

The match was resumed from where it was halted by rain in the third set yesterday. Yugoslavia won the two opening singles matches on Saturday.

Helen Dettweiler's 77 Wins Medal in Maryland Title Golf

Clips Stroke Off Record; Leads by 7

Sets New Mark for All Baltimore Courses at Elkridge.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.
a Staff Correspondent

Baltimore, May 23.—A new mark was written into the women's golf records of this city here today as Helen Dettweiler, the blonde star from the Congressional Club, played the Elkridge course in 77 strokes to win the medal round in the eighteenth renewal of the Maryland State championship.

Seven shots ahead of Mrs. Betty Mckley, the two-time winner from Indian Spring, Miss Dettweiler's score was a stroke under the course record at Elkridge, and two strokes under Mrs. Meckley's State tournament record of 79, scored three years ago at Suburban.

The score was the lowest ever made in the city, acording to golf followers. Mrs. Morrow's 78 course record here was the lowest among the 20-odd courses, and that score was tied by Joyce Wethered in an unofficial match at Five Farms.

Favorite to Keep Title.

The Congressional player, defending champion in this event, District amateur titleholder, winner of the Augusta Invitation and co-holder with Katherine Hemphill of the Aiken, S. C., four-ball event last winter, thus became an overwhelming choice to retain her crown and continue the Washington players' monopoly in the event.

With 32 players qualifying for the championship flight, all the "name" links women qualified for the match play rounds starting tomorrow, although the scores were comparatively high.

Mrs. Meckley's 84 was next, from nines of 41 and 43, with Mrs. Charlotte Stern, also of Indian Spring, third with an 86. Mrs. Stern was out in 42 and back in 44.

Mrs. E. B. Morrow, host club hope and seven-time State champion, was next with an 87, and paced the Baltimore golfers. She had an unfortunate 9 on the sixteenth hole, playing 5 off the tee as she twice drove into the lake.

Two Tied at 88.

Mrs. Hurst, of the host club, and Miss Elizabeth Janney, of Green Spring Valley, were next with 88's, while Mrs. T. E. Schulderburg, of the Baltimore Country Club, was the other 90 breaker, with 89.

Other District players qualifying for the title bracket included Mrs. Walter Stokes, Indian Spring, with 34, 47—90; Mrs. Myron Davvy, Congressional, with a pair of 46's for a 92; Marion Brown, Post champion from the Manor Club, who took 49 strokes on the outgoing nine and finished with a 94; Mrs. Florence Godfrey, Beaver Dam, 95, and Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, a stroke higher, with 96.

The medalist started with a 6 on the first hole, after being trapped in 2, and then 1-putted the second for a par 5. She parred the next two in regulation shots and went over on the short fifth, after being short from the tee. A stroke was regained on the seventh with a birdie 2 after the ball just missed an ace. She finished in regulation 4, 4 for a 38.

On the back nine Miss Detweiler again started with a bogey and on the thirteenth hole took 5, 2 over par, but from this point she finished with five consecutive pars from the men's card of 4-3-4-4-4 for a 39 and 77. She played all the finishing five holes in perfect strokes.

Mrs. E. M. Amick, Columbia; Mrs. Hanson, Mrs. Israel and Mrs. Wolman all tied at 104 and played off for two places in the first flight. Mrs. Amick won on the first hole and Mrs. Hanson won the other berth on the second.

Miss Detweiler meets Mrs. Amick this morning while other leading pairings find Mrs. Meckley against Mrs. Hanson, Miss Brown meeting Mrs. Sloman, Mrs. Stokes vs. Mrs. M. Glick, Mrs. Stern vs. Mrs. C. D. Warfield, Miss Janney vs. Mary Waldron and Mrs. Godfrey meeting Mrs. Davy.

Russell Motors nosed out the National Savings nine, 5 to 4, in an Industrial League game played on the South Ellipse yesterday. Harris slammed out two home runs to take batting honors for the day, and was ably assisted by Russell. Scott led the losers' attack with two hits.

Catonsville, Md., May 23.—Spencer Overton, Rolling Road Club amateur ace, played his home course in 69 here today and paired with Andy Gibson, Bonnie View professional, to win the Maryland State Golf Association pro-amateur with an 8 under par best-ball of 62.

Overton also entered the sweepstakes and won by a stroke margin over his partner, Gibson, who had 70. Two tied for third money, Alex Taylor, host pro, and Ralph Beach, Suburban, with even par 71's.

Johnny Bass, Clifton Park mentor, and Overton tied for second in the pro-amateur with Beach and J. B. Ryerson, Cooperstown, N. Y., amateur, two-time winner of the Mason-Dixon amateur. They each had 65's.

Gibson was also in the money for the third time, pairing with E. G. Barnes, of the host club, for a 66 in the pro-am, while Alex Taylor and Roger Pipper, sports editor of the Baltimore News, were next with 67, and three tied for third, Frank Invernezzi, Forest Park, and Henry Hamp, Hillendale; Invernezzi and Charles Phillips, Hillendale, and Beach and Nathan Kaufman, with 68.

Washington players were shut out of the money winning bracket, with George Diffenbaugh and Maury Fitzgerald, Kenwood, and Cliff Spencer and Eddie Bean, Beaver Dam, finishing with 70's, two strokes out of the prize list.

George Diffenbaugh, with 72, and Benny Loving, Congressional, paced the District mentors in the sweeps with 72 and 73, respectively.

Overton had six 3's and a deuce in his sub-par round, while Gibson, a stroke higher, went over par on four of the five par 3 holes and was still par, with 4 birdies.

It was the third consecutive pro-amateur that Gibson has paced the pros in the sweepstakes, and was the second in the last three events that he and his partner have won.

Gibson and Overton had a remarkable best ball. Overton had two handicaps and used both strokes, while Gibson helped him on five holes. They were each even par playing the fourteenth hole and had a best ball score of 6 under par.

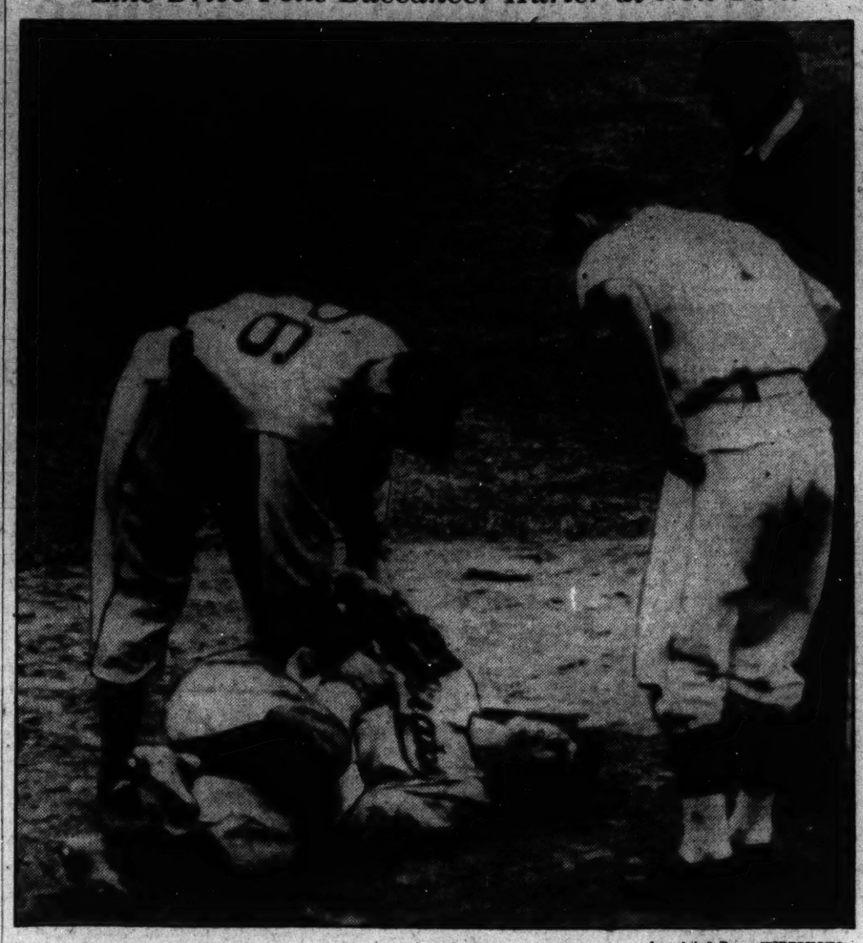
Line Drive Fells Buccaneer Hurler at New York



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Easterners Win by 4-3

With both teams deadlocked at 3-all, Al Kidwell, crack Eastern High School shortstop, stepped to the plate in the twelfth inning and smacked a home run to give the Lincoln Parkers a 4-3 victory over Bethesda-Chevy Chase in a well-played game at Eastern Stadium yesterday.

The Montgomery County lads were leading by three runs going into the seventh due to the hitting of S. Mizell, Young and Bauersfield. But Chief Guyon's charges, with Cooksey, Jacobs, Stockwell and Kidwell hitting the ball to all corners of the lot, evened up matters in the big seventh-frame rally.

Rip Carver went to the mound during the last four stanzas and the visitors were unable to pry a run from him. Meanwhile, Vannais, who struck out 11, was doing a great bit of hurling for himself, and it looked as though the game was going far into the afternoon until Kidwell stepped into that game-winning pitch.

Anne Ellis Bows To Winnie Suttie In Tennis Match

Bombarding her opponent with a repertoire of plain and fancy shots that kept her on the defensive throughout, Winnie Suttie yesterday routed Anne Ellis, third seeded player, 6—3, 6—0, to gain the quarter-final round of the Star tennis tournament at Army-Navy Country Club.

Considered the tourney dark horse, Miss Suttie played smart, aggressive tennis, especially in the second set, when she applied the pressure to clinch the match. Observers consider her chances of winning the championship excellent in view of her decisive victory yesterday over a player who ranks with the best locally.

In the only other singles engagement, Margo Lee entered the quarter-finals by coming from behind to defeat Jane Wilmerding, 0—6, 6—4, 9—7. In doubles Dorrette Miller paired with Margaret Robinson to trounce Margaret Graham and Betty Van der Straten, 6—0, 6—1.

Today's matches include Margo Lee vs. Miss Robinson, at 10:30 a. m.; Cynthia Davis vs. Miss Suttie and Miss Miller vs. Willie Osteen, both at 3 p. m., and Sarah Moore vs. Elinor Finckel, at 4 p. m.

Georgetown Nine Foe Of Western Maryland

Sophomore hurlers will get a chance to display their prowess for Georgetown today when the Hoya nine clashes with Western Maryland on the Medical School Field at 3 p. m. The game was postponed from last week. Johnny Smith or Bill Reynolds will pitch for the host club, with Joe Keegan behind the plate.

5th Battalion Firemen Down Sixth Battalion

The Fifth Battalion team of the Fire Department yesterday defeated the Sixth Battalion team, 8 to 4. Because the Fifth team was without uniforms and made a poor showing as to appearances, they adopted the name "ragmuffins."

Natty Gent Protests Georgie Is No Bum; Will Take On Best

Manager Fischel Says His Fighter Is Ready for Krieger, Risko, Yarosz or Any Others.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

"George Abrams," the natty gent with an unlighted and well masticated cigar protruding from the corner of his mouth, was saying, "Isn't a bum like you wrote in The Post yesterday morning, and I would like very much to have you correct that statement."

"No?" we asked, naively.

"No," said the natty gent, sinking a vicious fang in his El Perfumo. "No, and I don't want the impression to get around that he is."

"Supposing a lot of other folks beside myself think he's a three-letter word meaning bum, what then? You know you can't stop folks from having opinions."

"Nobody thinks it but you," he said, biting off more rope. We were trying to think of a good, smart comeback when a hollow-eyed youth with a mashed nose, standing by the natty gent's side, coughed slightly.

"Give this bum a dime and let him get some coffee," we told the natty gent, generosity fairly oozing from our pores.

"He isn't a bum, as I just told you," the N. G. fairly bellowed, "this is George Abrams."

We were pleased to meet George and we guess he'd say the same for us. He's that kind of a guy.

"We," the natty gent, who happened to be the boy's manager, Syd Fischel, continued, "We will take anybody the matchmaker wants to get for us. Anybody. Solly Krieger, Babe Risko, Harry Balsamo, or any other top-ranking fighter."

"You will take," we interrupted, "whoever the matchmaker gets for you because he's protecting your fighter. Why shouldn't you take whoever he gives you, when you know he's not going to put Abrams in with anybody good enough to give him a test."

"Would you say Krieger is a test?"

"He'd knock George loose from his wig in the first round, but he's in no condition to fight. He got knocked off the other night by Glen Lee."

"How about Risko?"

"Risko's okay—if you can get him."

"Supposing we can't get him, how about Yarosz, he's a former champion, he must have something on the ball?"

"He's all right, too, but you're not getting Yarosz, because they're thinking about putting him in with Freddie Steele in Pittsburgh next month. Why run the risk of an injury fighting a busher?"

"We'll fight 'im if he can be had, or any other top-ranking fighter."

"Like Ben Wojack, perhaps?"

"Don't remind us of him, but remember, we're ready for anybody, and we don't bar any 'name' fighter."

"You'll knock him out, too, I'll bet."

"Right! Who told you George has developed a knockout punch?"

"Jimmy Jones. He said he felt something like a cream puff splashing on his arm when George unloaded that new load of dynamite he found just before their second fight."

"Who won?"

"Jones was robbed!"

That was too much for the natty gent. He hailed a huff and went off in it with his fighter. We'll hear more about this later, I'll wager.

Mt. Rainier Nine Bows To Montgomery Blair

Pushing over two runs in the sixth inning which proved to be the winning margin, Montgomery Blair's baseball team won its second game of the season from Mount Rainier by the score of 7-5 on the Mount's field.

Norris, King and Orrison, the last two banging out doubles led the winners at bat, while Landolt, Mount Rainier second baseman, with a brace of hits in four trips to the plate was best for the losers.

By Jack Cuddy.

Copyright, 1938 by the United Press.

New York, May 23.—Listen to a snickering whinney from the harness-horse people who claim they are "improving the breed" of bangtails faster than the running-horse people who always are talking about such improvement.

CUDDY.

For more than a century betting on running horses has probably been the biggest daily gamble in American sports. I mean the wagering on horses that gallop under a jockey—horses that take their natural stride to gain speed.

The men who reared and raced those running thoroughbreds persistently soft-pedaled the wagering angle while they stressed the "improvement of the breed," even while the rest of the world was speeding up amazingly with machinery, automobiles, airplanes and motorboats.

We haven't heard much of this "improvement" from the harness men, who never provided much cause for Nation-wide wagering and consequently little cause for Nation-wide defense. Yet, these conservative chaps who attach their horses to little rubber-tired chariots, come out now with figures to prove that they are improving the breed faster than the running-horse guys.

* * * * *

Alden Calkins, press agent for the Trotting Horse Club of America, has compiled figures to show that trotting marks for the standard mile have dropped 12¾ seconds during the past 50 years, whereas running-horse records were pared only 5¼ seconds during that half century.

It seems that 50 years ago Maud S. established the world record for trotters at 2:08¼ for the mile. Expert horsemen who witnessed that performance said, "By gosh, it'll never be beaten." They were wrong. Today Greyhound holds the mark at 1:56, which is 12¾ seconds faster.

Meanwhile, what have the running horses done? Calkins discovers that the mark for the mile was 1:39¾ a half century ago. He emphasizes that while Ten Broeck held this figure in 1888, Ten Broeck actually established it 11 years before—in 1877. Today, 61 years later, Equipoise holds the mile record for a running horse at 1:34 2-5, a drop of only 5¼ seconds as compared with the 12¾ for trotting horses in 50 years.

* * * * *

In other words, the trotting horses, with their unnatural gait and sulky encumbrances are rapidly paring down the difference in speed for the mile between themselves and the running horses who can go "all out" under the whip without fear of being called for a break in their proper stride. The running horses have no proper stride. They simply hit the easiest gait known to horse—the full gallop. They are not required to face and conquer an artificial gait in training like the trotting gee-gees.

Moreover, the trotting record-holder is still living and many harness experts predict that Greyhound, now a 6-year-old, will slice another full second from the mile mark before the summer is over, bringing it down to 1:55.

Publicity Director Calkins points out also that while speeds in running classics like the Kentucky Derby, etc., have changed little during the past 12 years, the Hambletonian classic for 3-year-old trotters has been clipped 3¼ seconds in those dozen years. When the Hambletonian was first launched in 1926, Guy McKinney won it in 2:04¾, whereas last year at Goshen, N. Y., Shirley Hanover's winning time was 2:01½. This year, because of the top-flight field entered, the Hambletonian time is expected to be placed close to the 2-minute mark.

Pays $5.20; Jungo Wins Place Money

Sylvia G. Takes Show Honors; 5,000 See Day's Sport.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., May 23—Tedmelia, 3-year-old daughter of the deceased sire Teddy, which stood on the Gilpin Farm for years, won the Sutton Purse in the colors of Mrs. Kenneth N. Gilpin, Virginia sportswoman, today, turning back five others in a struggle over the 6½ furlong course. Saddled by Trainer C. M. Feltner, who seems to have a strong grip on the conditioning championship of the meeting, and ridden by Jockey Lou Machado, who was turning in his third victory of the program, Tedmelia brought a $5.20 mutuel to her backers and stepped the route in 1:24 4-5 over a heavy track.

A crowd of 5,000 witnessed the eight-race program. Due to the derailment of a freight car, the race special had to be re-routed and the Baltimore and Washington customers arrived after the first event.

Tedmelia and Timber Lady, the latter the favorite, staged a merry battle for the pacemaking honors, Machado took Tedmelia to the inside. As the pair entered the stretch, Tedmelia hugged the rail, while Timber Lady ran out badly, losing her chance. Meanwhile, Jungo was saving much ground at the turn and came with a rush in the stretch to take second money from Sylvia G. Timber Lady, after regaining her stride, finished fouth.

A heavy downpour just before the first race turned the track into a sea of mud.

J. E. Hughes' Drawout, a first-time starter, carried the light weight of the first race to victory to bring an $11.60 mutuel. The son of The Scout, with Eddie Kilgore doing the booting, finished a half length in front of the favorite, Lady Timarocle, a paddock tip. Asterisk was third in the field of eight. The race was a three-horse proposition from start to finish.

Stand By, 12-year-old campaigner operating in the colors of E. H. Titmus, jr., accounted for the second race at an $8.80 payoff. The old gelding was hard ridden by Jockey Lou Machado and ran Miss Symphony into defeat before staving off the closing bid of Reigh Tetrarch, a long shot. Wise Revue was third. Small Change was a dull-running favorite.

Getting to the front in the early stages and refusing to be beaten, Landsman proved a nose winner of the third race. Jockey Machado turned in his second success of the afternoon aboard the $34.80 shot, which barely downed Addis Ababa. Lady Dunlin was only a neck off the fighting pair. The winner was performing in the silks of J. E. Murphy.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DRAWOUT, $11.60, $4.80, $3.60; LADY TIMAROLE, $5.00, $3.00; ASTERISK, $4.00.

DRAWOUT shook off ASTERISK to take command entering the turn and, under strong handling, held LADY TIMAROLE safe in the closing drive. LADY TIMAROLE, rushed to contention, responded to punishment to move up menacingly in the stretch, but hung. ASTERISK weakened after pressing the pace in the early stages. MISS GREEN flashed early speed and stopped. KILLY was through early.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STAND BY, $8.80, $6.00, $5.00; REIGH TETRARCH, $22.60, $10.80; WISE REVUE, $5.60.

STAND BY, hard rushed on the outside to take command at the first turn, drew clear of MISS SYMPHONY approaching the backstretch, but had to be kept to a strong drive to stave off the closing bid of REIGH TETRARCH. The latter lacked early speed and improved his position sharply in the final stages. WISE REVUE hung after moving up with a rush along the backstretch. MISS SYMPHONY tired from forcing the pace. CAUTIOUS BO was blocked by STAND BY at the first turn and had to be pulled up sharply.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:52½. Off at 3:54. Winner, J. E. LANDSMAN, off well, took command in the opening furlong, was hard ridden thereafter and barely lasted. ADDIS ABABA gained steadily along the backstretch, came to the inside for the final drive and just missed. LADY DUNLIN lost some ground at the first turn, ran on the outside of the winner into the stretch and hung in the closing test. BENGAY made up a lot of ground to close with good energy. YOUNG NATIVE had early speed and stopped.

Daily Double, Stand By and Landsman, Paid $188.60.

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:19. Off at 4:20½. Winner, Mrs. B. A. PETEE LAD, taken under restraint when FLYING CARPET was sent to the front under punishment, came around the leader to take command in the stretch and was opening a gap at the end. FLYING CARPET, sent to the front under driving tactics, weakened in the closing stages. GAYLASS went evenly, but could not threaten. TETRA DOMINO was hard ridden from the start. The others were outrun.

Two of the most exasperating jobs around a race track is those of track superintendent and starter. The man in charge of conditioning the track spends ten hours getting the oval into fair shape and then a shower comes along and makes him and his crew start a brand-new task. Likewise, the starter gets the horses practically lined up and one of them bolts through and so

Bankers Expect Guest Record For Convention

Reservations Indicate That 1930 Peak Will Be Eclipsed.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

The twentieth annual convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association is expected to set a new attendance record. T. Stanley Holland, trust officer, American Security & Trust Co., and chairman of the general committee for this year's meeting at Hot Springs, Va., June 9-12, reports that reservations are coming in rapidly. Thomas J. Groom, executive vice president and cashier, Bank of Commerce & Savings, and president of the association, also expects a large assembly.

The record convention of the local bankers' organization from a standpoint of attendance thus far, was that held in 1930, at Asheville, N. C., when the Grove Park Inn and surrounding hotels and cottages were occupied by 260 members of the association and their guests. It is expected that the delegation to this year's meeting will exceed this mark, according to present indications.

Senior members recall that the original out-of-town annual meeting of the District bankers' group was held at Deer Park, Md., and since that time it has assembled at numerous places outside of the District of Columbia. There were two conventions held at Montauk, Long Island. Another one took the form of a three-day cruise on Norfolk & Washington steamboat.

At next month's meeting, President Groom will end his administration, which has been longer than the ordinary year's tenure of office. As first vice president of the association, he was called to the post of chief executive on account of the death of Karl W. Corby, which occurred a short time after his election to the presidency.

Hilleary G. Hoskinson, a vice president of Riggs National Bank, is slated for the next president of the association and will be succeeded as first vice president by Ord Preston, president of Union Trust Co., now holding the position of second vice president. Secretary Archibald M. McLachlen, of McLachlen Banking Corporation, will become second vice president, and, according to past custom, Convention Chairman Holland will succeed Mr. McLachlen in the third vice president's office. Secretary Frederick P. H. Siddons of American Security & Trust Co., reports the speakers' program practically completed.

Gatley's Anniversary.

Albert S. Gatley, executive vice president of Lincoln National Bank, has served 25 years as treasurer of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, and is known as an expert on budgets. He has always had a deep interest in the affairs of the organization and will probably serve as its treasurer for many years to come. Mr. Gatley has been associated with the Lincoln institution ever since it began business, and his brother, E. Preston Gatley, is president of National Savings & Trust Co.

Bond Club Outing.

President L. Clark Brown of the Bond Club of Washington and Myles H. Quail, general chairman of its outing at Manor Club, May 27, announce that all tickets have been sold for its "stock exchange," an amusement feature at the picnic.

Cotton Lower; October at 8.57

New York, May 23 (AP).—Cotton was lower today under July liquidation and foreign selling. October sold up from 8.54 to 8.59 and closed at 8.57, with final prices 1 to 3 points net lower.

The market opened unchanged to 3 points lower, with comparatively steady Liverpool cables offset by offerings from abroad. European advices late in the day were regarded as somewhat less disturbing and partial recoveries followed. Although prices eased to new low levels for the movement, only a moderate amount of trade price fixing on a scale-down was uncovered a few points below 8.50 for July.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Are Sluggish in Light Trading; U. S. Government Bonds Lower; Wheat Drops.

New York, May 23.—Stocks moved sluggishly lower in a day of much guessing on legislation and war but of little business activity. Most stock price changes were fractional. United States Government bonds weakened, but it looked as though some foreign money came this way. July wheat closed 1⅝ cents lower at 75 cents a bushel.

Opening prices in stocks were irregularly lower and it required an hour or so for enough business to come in to give the ticker wheel more than one turn a minute. After prices had been swept down a point or so in late morning, a feeble rally restored fractions to most stocks. The remainder of the day was spent in a sidewise movement with no particular trend.

Coppers Weaken.

Copper shares were again among the weak issues. Gold shares did better as a reflection of the hoarding fever caused by the unfavorable turn of the war news from Europe. Dome Mines was lifted a point and a half. Homestead held about even. The steel shares did fairly well in spite of lower estimates of production. Bethlehem ruled a point higher most of the time and Steel common held a fraction above its previous close after an early dip. International Nickel found a good demand.

American Telephone was sluggish in a narrow range. The airplanes found some friends. Douglas moved up more than a point. Few stocks outside the preferred category moved much more than a point from the home plate. Among the preferreds to find wide quotations were Atlas Powder, Case, Neisner, Vulcan, Gillette and Commonwealth.

More War Alarms.

Stock market movements were so similar to those of nearly every day of the past month that little is to be gained in trying to weigh new influences that may be at work. Patently the war news did not look any too good, but it seemed to be clearing a bit as the day wore on. Wall Street inclined to the guess that trouble would be avoided this time, but it had to recognize the upsetting force of one demarche after another in Europe. Moreover, the outbreak of fighting in our southern neighbor, freely enough predicted for the past few months, was conceded as capable of giving trouble, without the capability of being serious enough to distract the populace from its economic difficulties.

On the home front the summer is approaching with the usual slackening of industrial activity. This week the steel mills will run at only 29 per cent of capacity, according to the estimate of the American Iron and Steel Institute. Last week the rate was 30.7 per cent, after being 30.4 per cent in the previous week and 30.7 per cent three weeks ago. A year ago the steel industry was deceiving the country into a false sense of business activity by running at 91 per cent of capacity. The present rate is the lowest since early in January.

Ways to Help.

Among the permanent denizens of Wall Street or the generals of finance and industry who visit this financial center, expectation of any marked improvement in business before autumn is not held and a considerable body of opinion thinks that recovery after a few months will be possible—with the aid of large crops—only provided a number of "ifs" are properly resolved. Some help is expected from the tax bill now about to become law. Should Congress manage to limit the new spending program so that Federal funds could not be employed in direct competition with private industry, particularly with the utilities, more help would be gained. For the remainder, the less heard from the Government the better.

Fall, Fall Again.

Meanwhile at least one branch of the brain trust organization seems to be preparing for a fresh attack. Wall Street hears from Washington that one section of the New Dealers, undeterred by the distressing evidence which the state of the Nation now gives of how economic planning can go awry, is planning to work out a plan for the more complete control over private industry than is now exercised by the bureaus of the Government. It is said that the President favors such a scheme, which is easy for many Wall Streeters to believe, inasmuch as such Tugwellian doctrine was popular with the President from the start. The cynical Wall Street view is that, having planned business into a mess, it will be no easy matter to plan it out of the hole, even with an election coming on.

Giving Way and Away.

Because economics as such has so little to do with shaping the Government's economic policies, that another mass resolution of well-known economists (the Economists National Committee on Monetary Policy) in which pump-priming is shown to be a fallacy is bound to have no effect. Political expediency, plus perhaps a certain amount of personal feeling, in the first place ordained pump priming, WPA and other forms of "relief," involving the sending of billions to keep a vast army of voters on the right side. It is easy to show that there are times when economics must give way to other considerations, humane and otherwise, but the experience of the past few years indicated too much giving away, which isn't quite the same thing.

Self-Government.

Among the brokerage houses a good deal of satisfaction was expressed over the conciliatory tone of the speech made last week by Chairman Douglas of the SEC. However, no one could have gained the impression that the lambs were willing to lie down with the wolf. Every one seemed to understand perfectly that the SEC has not the slightest idea of cutting the tie rope. On the contrary, instead of using its time to perfecting the administration of those branches of endeavor into which it already has entered, the SEC inevitably is following all Government bureaus in a steady expansion of activity. The SEC might in time become a good policeman of the Stock Exchange, but it won't be content until it can run from Washington every last little detail of the whole works.

Steel Operations Decline to 29%

New York, May 23 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will decline 1.7 points to 29 per cent of capacity, lowest since January 10, and compared with 30.7 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today. A month ago operations averaged 32 per cent of capacity while a year ago they were 91 per cent.

Gen. Foods Slashes Top Officers' Salaries

General Foods Corporation reported to the Securities Commission yesterday salaries of its principal officers were cut about in half last year. C. M. Chester, chairman of the board, received $84,000 last year compared with $159,600 in 1936. Clarence Francis, president, was paid $89,999 compared with $132,999 the previous year.

Other 1937 salaries shown in corporation reports to the commission included American Locomotive Co.—W. C. Dickerman, president, $70,761; American and Foreign Power Co.—C. E. Calder, president, $89,510; Scovill Manufacturing Co., Waterbury, Conn.—Edward O. Goss, president, $80,135.

Exchange Restrictions Lifted by Brazil

Brazil lifted today all exchange restrictions regarding imports from the United States, the State Department announced. The department received a telegram from Ambassador Caffery, Rio Janeiro, stating that the Bank of Brazil has advised the embassy that beginning at the close of exchange today the bank will grant "spot" exchange to pay for American imports.

Thirty-day exchange contracts have been required. The changed regulation will apply retroactively, the department said, to drafts maturing after April 1.

Commercial Loans Continue Decline

Federal Reserve Board bank loans to business decreased in the week ended May 18 for the fifteenth consecutive week, the board reported yesterday.

Banks in 101 leading cities cut their loans for commercial, industrial and agricultural purposes by $36,000,000 to $4,074,000,000. New York city banks alone accounted for $14,000,000 of the decrease. The report also showed a decrease of $28,000,000 in the bank holdings of Federal securities, an increase of $10,000,000 in holdings of securities guaranteed by the Federal Government and a decrease of $70,000,000 in holdings of other securities.

July Wheat Falls to 74⅞, 4-Year Bottom

Crop Outlook and Easing Tension in Europe Help Decline.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 23.—Wheat prices struck a new four-year bottom today in the wake of quiet selling influenced by easing of political tension in Europe, price declines at other world markets, rains in the domestic grain belt and slack export business.

Tumbling 1¾ cents a bushel to 74⅞, July wheat hit the lowest point since the market touched 73¼ in April, 1934. With the winter wheat harvest now under way in the Southwest, new crop grain is worth less in Chicago at the beginning of harvest than in any season since 1933. Barring the 1930-34 slump, wheat is the lowest in 30 years.

Traders said the prospect of the second largest winter wheat crop on record is the important factor in the market, although lack of speculative interest restricts the trade. Hedging is expected to appear as soon as new wheat moves into trade channels.

Wheat closed ⅞@1⅛ below Saturday's finish; May, 78@78⅛; July, 75@75⅛; September, 75⅞@76; corn lost ⅜@⅝; May, 57¼; July, 58⅜@58½; September, 59⅜@59½; oats, ¼@½; May, 28¾; rye, 1@1¼; May, 57½; lard unchanged to 3 down.

BankersExpect Guest Record For Convention

Reservations Indicate That 1930 Peak Will Be Eclipsed.

More than 200 tickets were disposed of. The "exchange" officials are announcing as prizes an automobile, $75 credit at a department store, $75 credit at a clothing store, $80 credit for merchandise and $50 credit at a sporting goods store. Consolation prizes will also be awarded at the dinner, a door prize of a wrist watch and prizes for the golf, horseshoe pitching and other sports events.

Armistice Day.

Signing by President Roosevelt of a bill passed by Congress making Armistice Day, November 11, a national holiday, will give local banks and those throughout the country another legal holiday. While the day has been widely observed in the National Capital in the past, banks have carried on their business as usual. This will mean a second holiday for the financial district in November, the other being Thanksgiving Day.

Members of the board of governors of the Washington Stock Exchange have voted to close that institution on Saturdays during the summer, beginning June 4, and continuing until a resumption of openings on September 10, first Saturday after Labor Day.

Banking Notes.

Y. E. Booker, member of the board of governors of the Investment Bankers Association, is back from its spring council meeting at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.

The Hamilton Bank Club held its recent spring party at the Potomac Boat Club. George M. Rowzee was chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Mr. Manning retired from business in 1932 and returned to his home at Paeonian Springs, near Leesburg.

President to Visit Naval Academy for June Graduation

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt will attend the graduating exercises of the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, June 2. The White House said yesterday it had not been decided what part he will take in the ceremonies.

The President will inspect a resettlement project near Reedsville, W. Va., Friday morning and go on to Hyde Park, N. Y., for the Memorial Day week-end.

An aide said Mr. Roosevelt's summer vacation plans were being held up until Congress adjourns, but that he still was thinking of a second voyage to South American waters.

The President plans to visit Gettysburg, Pa., July 3, for the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, and Marietta, Ohio, July 8, for the 150th anniversary of establishment of the Northwest Territory.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, May 23.—Unsettled European political developments and lower Wall Street prices over the week-end caused quotations in the stock market to be marked down. Foreign bonds were exceptionally weak and copper shares declined further. Gold mining issues which sagged sharply at the openins, rallied later in the day, and transatlantic securities finished slightly lower. The gilt-edged group was weak throughout the day and final quotations were off a quarter of a point or more.

Paris.—The bourse closed weak with trading very quiet. Rentes declined 65 to 210 centimes and a majority of the active favorites were sharply down. Suez Canal lost 355 francs and Royal Dutch 40. Banking shares rallied from the day's low prices while industrials were heavy.

Liverpool.—Increased Russian and Indian offerings and lower prices today at Winnipeg, caused wheat futures to react and close unchanged to ½d net lower. Prices were as much as a penny higher in the early trading. Cotton futures rallied from the low level of the day on trade and local buying and closed 1 to 2 points net lower. The market was heavy earlier on the unfavorable European political situation.

Boys Disrupt Signal Cables, Imperil Trains

Youngsters Shot Phone Wires of Pennsy Line; $3,000 Damage.

Two 15-year-old high school boys confessed responsibility for destruction of $3,000 worth of railroad property along the Pennsylvania tracks behind the National Training School, near the District line and temporarily disrupting the railway's signal system.

Police said the youths admitted removing six manhole covers by the tracks Saturday and firing several volleys from a .32-caliber revolver and a .22-caliber rifle at the cables below.

The shots wrecked two telephone systems and two relay signal systems, according to police, and might have caused heavy loss of life if the damage had not been detected immediately.

One of the youths was arrested yesterday at the scene of the vandalism, with the revolver in his possession, while the other was picked up at his home.

The boys are being held at the Receiving Home.

Six men and boys were arrested over the week-end for discharging firearms in the same vicinity. They were all firing at targets, police said. Five were released on $25 collateral, while the sixth, a 15-year-old boy, was placed in custody of his parents pending arraignment in Juvenile Court.

'Talk All Summer' On Rate Revision, Is Senate Threat

By the Associated Press.

Senators Wheeler (Democrat), Montana; Norris (Independent) Nebraska, and Copeland (Democrat), New York, served notice on the Senate yesterday they would rather talk "all summer" than permit passage of the bill revising the "long-and-short-haul" provision of the interstate commerce law. The clause forbids railroads to charge a lower rate for a long haul than for a shorter one over the same route and in the same direction.

In a letter red to the Senate, Chairman Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, supported action of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee holding up a bill liberalizing Government loans to railroads.

The letter said railroad management and large creditors of railroads "come with poor grace" when they object to provisions intended to protect RFC advances. Jones suggested that the question of wage decreases proposed by the railroads be considered by the committee before it approved the loan bill.

Clothesline Crisis At Greenbelt May Be Met by Power

Plans to install electric dryers at Greenbelt to eliminate use of unsightly clotheslines were revealed last night by Town Manager Roy Braden, following a meeting of the town council.

Braden said he planned to send questionnaires to the 500 families in the community to test their reactions to installing dryers in more than 150 of the community basements. His plan was announced following a controversy arising from a regulation which prohibits hanging clothes on outside lines after 4 p. m.

The council tabled a resolution which would prohibit sale and use of fireworks for July 4 within the town limits. Action on the motion will be taken at the next meeting June 13.

A special meeting was called for 8 p. m. tomorrow to select the winner of a contest for designing a town flag and seal.

Hellmuth Divorce Held Valid in D.C. By Appeals Court

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday sustained a decree of the District Court validating the divorce of Frank Hellmuth from Mary J. Hellmuth, in nearby Maryland. Washington was their marital domicile.

The court pointed out that the husband and wife separated here in February, 1925, when they executed a contract, stating they had abandoned all intention of living together again. The husband agreed to pay $35 a month.

In 1926 Hellmuth became a bona fide resident of Maryland and he obtained a divorce in that State in 1930, marrying in 1932. Several months later Hellmuth sued for a limited divorce here and Mrs. Hellmuth asked that the decree obtained by her husband be declared void. She claimed she still was Hellmuth's lawful wife.

"Even assuming the correctness of appellant's (Mrs. Hellmuth's) contention that the decree of the Maryland court was not entitled to full faith and credit in the District of Columbia because Maryland was not the last marital domicile of the parties, it does not follow that the lower court was in error in dismissing the bill (brought by Mrs. Hellmuth)."

third leading hitter on the Chicago club.

Bucky Harris had more time today to contemplate the sad estate of his Nats, who are reeling through the West in a woeful slump. Since leaving the home hearth at Griffith Stadium, the Washington club has won only two out of nine games.

It was during a similar slump several years ago when the Nats had lost eight in a row that Harris gave to baseball one of its wisest cracks. Said Harris after the eighth straight beating: "Oh, well, we can't win 'em all."

Tomorrow Harris will send Dutch Leonard or Monte Weaver against the White Sox in the series' finale. Leonard has lost two starts on the current trip and Weaver lost a 4-3 decision to Lefty Grove in his only outing.

Manager Jimmy Dykes will send Monty Stratton to the mound against the Nats. It will be Stratton's 1938 debut. He has been idle since tearing a muscle on his pitching arm last March on the same day that Luke Appling suffered a broken leg. Last year Stratton was Chicago's No. 1 pitcher.

There isn't mystery as to why the Nats have lost seven of their last nine starts. Their pitching has gone incredibly sour. Because the official averages reveal that the Nats lead the league in fielding and are second only to the Cleveland Indians in team batting with an average of .284.

The Contract

Don't Be a Slave to 'Habit!'

The most difficult defensive plays are those that go against habit. Even very good players make the mistake of falling into mental ruts and becoming "wooden." I wonder how many players in East's position in the following hand would have defeated the three notrump contract?

South, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Dbl.	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

South, with 3½-plus honor tricks, 8 honor cards and 4-3-3-3 distribution, was correct in bidding one notrump rather than one heart. West chose to make a takeout double, as a safer course than overcalling with two spades. (He could always make this latter bid if partner were to respond two hearts). North, with strength in only one suit, and that a minor, saw no reason to let the opponents exchange information and used his notrump raise partly as a pre-emptive bid and partly because he felt that his one suit might be enough for game in notrump.

West opened the spade queen. Declarer won, and immediately took a diamond finesse. The diamond queen held and the next finesse was won in dummy with the ten-spot. Now declarer could count five diamond tricks, two spades and one club, but, since the club ace was almost certainly off-side, he would need a heart trick to fulfill his contract. On that analysis he led dummy's heart nine. This maneuver would almost certainly have worked if East had been an average player. Ninety-nine in one hundred Easts would automatically duck the nine-spot, playing "second hand low," and after such a duck declarer would be safe. If West refused to take his heart ace, declarer could immediately astablish a club for the ninth trick; if West accepted the heart ace he could make no return that would do his side any good. A spade return would be out of the question since it would go into the combined tenace of 10-6 in dummy and K-5 in declarer's hand. A club return, of course, would be futile. Finally, a heart return would establish two heart tricks for declarer and make a club trick unnecessary.

But all of this did not ensue because this particular East was highly alert. He had noted his partner's lead of the spade queen and the further vital fast that the spade ten was still guarded in dummy. This meant that West would not be able to clear his own spade suit but that he would require a spade lead through declarer. The prime need, then, was to protect and conserve West's stoppers in the outside suits. If declarer had the heart ace he would certainly not permit East to take the lead with the king, either now or later. But, at the same time, declarer's king represented East's only chance to get on lead and there was, of course, a reasonable hope that declarer did not have the heart ace. At any rate there was nothing to lose and a great deal to gain by jumping up with the heart king, even though East had five hearts and even though it required a "second hand high" play. On that shrewd analysis East boldly put up the king and, when it held, declarer's goose was cooked.

Bob Burns Says—

As usual there will be a lot of weddings this June and I think some of us married men should give a word of encouragement to the young men who are about to take that step and might be gettin' a little bit shaky. In the first place it'll make your job more permanent.

I know one man who won't hire an unmarried man. When I asked him "why?" He says "Well, I am pretty blunt and overbearing and I find that married men don't get so upset when I yell at 'em."
